POISON PLOT FAILS ON KENT ISLAND

Constable Declares Mysterious Enemy Has Caused Annoyance. Sees Murder Attempt

Pouring of paris green in the well at the home of Constable John Walters, at Phillips Corner, Kent Island, with the idea of causing his death and that of his wife, was apparently the plan conceived by some enemy last Saturday night.

Constable Walters told how he had been subjected to a long series of annoyances by some mysterious enemy, and how he and his wife had been made ill last week by drinking water from the well.

Neighbors who helped Walters clean the well, after he had found the water unfit to drink, state that a large box of partly dissolved paris green was taken from the well.

Officers of the law it is stated, will conduct a thorough investigation in an effort to apprehend the guilty party or parties.

Walters is confident that he knows the guilty one, and believes that if he had owned bloodhounds they would have carried him directly to the doorway of the man whom he believes committed the crime.

"I believe I know the identity of the man who committed the act," said Walters, "but having no definite proof I am not yet prepared to make an accusation. I believe though, that bloodhounds would have carried me right to his door."

Bedouin's Whole Life Ruled by Superstition

Despite his courage in battle, the Bedouin loves life and fears death. This is due to his conceptions of afterlife, which are unclear and differ from the general Mohammedan ideas; in fact, the average Bedouin is only nominally a Mohammedan; he retains very little of that faith over and beyond his belief in one God.

In the conception of the Bedouin, the soul of the dying leaves the body through the nostrils and flies away into paradise or hell, according to the lifetime conduct of the deceased. Both paradise and hell are situated below the earth, and the soul leads a life there much similar to that of his brothers in this world, the main difference being merely that, according to his merits, it will be one of wealth or poverty. The principal advantage of paradise over hell is that the abode of the good is plentiful in water, the most important necessity to the desert dweller.

A great part in Bedouin imagination is played by superstition. The desert is inhabited by thousands of ghosts, "jinns" and "affrits," and the tribesman lives in constant fear of them. The soul of a man asleep is temporarily away from his body, and it is therefore with particular care that a Bedouin awakes a companion for fear that his soul may fail to return to the body and be replaced by some ill-disposed spirit.—Dr. Edward J. Bing in Current History Magazine.

Safe Bet That Answer Didn't Win the Prize

The kindly old squire was giving a little treat to the village school children. After tea he stepped onto the platform and announced with a beaming smile:

"Now, I am going to perform certain actions, and you must guess what proverb they represent. The boy or girl who succeeds first will receive a shilling."

That did it. Instantly every eye was fixed on him. First of all, the old gentleman lay down on the platform. Then one man came forward and tried to lift him. Two others came to his aid and between them they raised the squire, who was rather portly.

The actions were meant to represent the motto, "Union is strength."

When they had finished the squire stepped forward and asked if any child had solved the puzzle.

At once a grubby hand shot up and an eager voice squeaked: "Let sleeping dogs lie."—Pearson's Weekly.

Arabian Dancing Girls

"The Arabian dancing girls," a traveler explains, "are born to their profession. Many of them had dancing mothers. Others are dedicated to the profession by their mothers when they are but babies. While there are no dancing schools, these children practice continually, imitating from earliest childhood the steps and movements of the dancers, until they are highly skilled in it themselves.

"Unlike the other Arab women, these dancing girls appear with their faces uncovered. They wear heavy and voluminous skirts, like old-fashioned European dresses. They are frequently very plain, decorated only by the bangles and chains. While the girls are no more beautiful than other girls, they have exceeding charm, which makes them very delightful."

Greeks and Paint

The Greeks recognized the value of paint as a preservative and made use of something akin to it on their ships. Pliny writes of the mode of boiling wax and painting ships with it, after which, he continues, "neither the sea, nor the wind, nor the sun can destroy the wood thus protected."

The Romans, being essentially a warlike people, never brought the decoration of buildings to the high point it had reached with the Greeks. For all that the ruins of Pompeii show many structures whose mural decorations are in fair shape today. The colors used were glaring; a black background was the usual one, and the combinations worked thereon were red, yellow and blue.

Dollar Courtship

John McBeth had secured a license to marry Mary Manning, but the intended bride changed her mind, and six weeks later John made his second appearance in the clerk's office.

"Misther Johnson, in February I got a license from you to marry Mary Manning, an' I deedn't marry her. An' now, please your honor, would ye be so good as to alter it so it would fit Ellen McWatty?"

"No, you must get a new license to fit Ellen."

"And pay for it?"

"Certainly."

"Ah, mon, I'm ruined entirely. Fur I just coorted Ellen to save the dollar."—Youth's Companion.

Had Them All Beaten

Three elders of a Glasgow kirk fell to discussing the merits of the sermons of their minister.

"He's wonderful," said the senior. "I mind him preachin' three sairmons frae one text."

"But that's naething tae auld Thomas," said another. "I mind him preaching six sairmons frae the shortest text in the Book."

"Oh," said the third man, puffing slowly and thoughfully at his pipe, "that's naething tae ma wife. She's been preachin' at me for 20 years frae nae text at a'."
