WILLIAM ELLIOT

Proposes publishing, in Washington City, near the Capitol, about the commencement of the ensuing Session of Congress, an

EVENING NEWSPAPER, to be entitled

The Washington Gazette.

Price (Daily) Ten Dollars per Annum, or Price a week (on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) Five Dollars per Annum, payable in advance.

[To be printed on the patent press, which works both forms at once, with double the expedition of the common press now in use.]

At a crisis so interesting, at a period so eventful as the present, nothing is more essential to the welfare of our country, than the promulgation of political truth and the general diffusion of correct political information. A vehicle to answer this object, in addition to the one now in operation in this city, the vast increase of population imperiously demands. To the glorious issue of the contest in which we are now engaged, so honorable to our country and so beneficial to the rights of nations, nothing will more effectually contribute than the manifestation of the real causes of the present war, by the publication of official documents and an impartial report of the proceedings of Congress. And though this has hitherto been done in an able manner by the editors of the National Intelligencer, circumstances require additional aid in disseminating information. For the accomplishment of this, no situation is better calculated than the metropolis of our country and the seat of our National Legislature, where every means of obtaining authentic and immediate information, important, interesting and useful, is within reach.

As the political principles inculcated will be Republican, every possible effort shall be exerted to maintain, support and disseminate those principles. Of this Gazette, public good will be the great end; to the attainment of which all honorable means shall be used and no exertion spared. Though the editor advocates the war, waged for the maintenance of our commercial rights and the protection of our brave seamen, yet he will foster and encourage, by every possible means, domestic trade and manufactures, the great sources of national wealth and independence.

The publication of this Gazette in the evening will generally enable the editor to lay before his readers in the district of Columbia, a sketch of each day's proceedings of the Senate and House of Representatives, on the same evening, during the Session of Congress, together with the contents of the Northern Mail, so very interesting and important at the present crisis.

As the editor will receive, and has for some years past received, for his late establishment at the Tontine Coffe House, New York, valuable journals from Europe, he will have an opportunity of publishing from them early copious and impartial details, which he presumes will not be uninteresting to his American readers; and from the residence of some particular friend in South America, on whose punctual correspondence he can depend, he will also be able to give the most authentic accounts of the contests and revolutions that are now successively progressing in that quarter of the globe.

Advertisements will be inserted on the customary terms.

Subscriptions or communications, in the interim, may be addressed to J. Elliot, prin. Capitol Hill, near the Bank, Washington City.

In the introduction to the former of the above works, a new and not uninteresting view is presented to the principles of Animation, and a full and liberal examination of the doctrine advocated by the late celebrated Dr. Rush, on the Unity of disease is offered to the decision of the Medical Publick.

The object of the latter is an attempt to indicate to the discriminating and ingenious mind, the distance between cases and facts, between experiments as they are detailed and realities as they exist, between gratuitous hypothesis and critical philosophy.
