THE MODERN NUBIANS AND THEIR ANCIENT MONUMENTS.

In surveying the wonders which crowd the banks of the Nile from Meroe to Memphis' we are struck with the reflection, that the wealth, power, and genius whence they derived their origin have entirely passed away. In some portions of that extensive tract, a race little superior to savages pass a rude and precarious life, ignorant of the arts, and insensible equally to the beauty and magnificence of the ruins which they tread under foot. They have ceased even to claim connexion with the people who raised the splendid monuments of Ebsamboul, Karnac, and Dendera; and, accordingly, they ascribe the anxiety which our countrymen display, in regard to those mountains of antiquity, to the desire of visiting the tombs of a European nation, who are supposed by them to have built the temples and sculptured the obelisks. The Nubians, especially, have relapsed into that low condition, where even curiosity has become dormant, and in which the eye can be every day fixed on the noblest works of human ingenuity without suggesting any speculation as to their authors, their epoch, or their design. Throughout the whole world, in short, there is no greater contrast to be witnessed than between what now is, and what must once have been, in Ethiopia and Egypt. There is even great difficulty in passing, by an effort of thought, from the one condition to the other, through the various scenes of conquest and desolation which seem necessary to have produced the effects we contemplate. We might question history; but we would receive no answer, as to the events and characters which the lapse of three thousand years has thrown into an impenetrable obscurity. Surrounded with darkness, we grope our way amidst superb structures, dedicated to gods and heroes whose names make but a faint impression on our ears; and we satisfy ourselves with the conclusion, that a great people had existed there before the era of recorded time, whose literature and philosophy have been outlived by their architectural monuments.—Edinburgh Cabinet Library, No. XII. Nubia and Abyssinia.

What Birds may be taught to do.—A Frenchman, not many years ago, exhibited some Canary birds in London, which performed several very amusing tricks, which one would hardly believe had he not seen them. One of them, taking a slender stick in its claws, passed its head between its legs, and suffered itself to be turned round, as a bird when the cook is roasting it. Another balanced itself, and was swung backwards and forwards, on a kind of slack rope. A third suffered itself to be shot at, and falling down as if dead, to be put into a little wheelbarrow and wheeled away by one of his comrades.

Partridges also have been taught to play the part of artillery men. At the word of command, from their teacher, they would light their matches at a little brass furnace—and at the second command, would touch off the cannon, at the noise of which they did not seem to be in the least frightened.

At another signal, some of the little warriors fell on their sides, and pretended to be dead—some limped away as if they were lame; others cried out as if they had been wounded; but at the slightest roll of the drum, the dead partridges jumped up, the cripples recovered the use of their limbs, and all were as lively and happy as ever.

The Senses Fallible Witnesses.—If in the heat of summer we descend into a cave, we are sensible that we are surrounded by a cold atmosphere; but if in the rigour of a frosty winter we descend into the same cave, we are conscious of the presence of a warm atmosphere. Now a thermometer suspended in the cave, on these occasions, will show exactly the same temperature; and, in fact, the air of the cave maintains the same temperature at all seasons of the year. The body, however, being in the one case, removed from a warm atmosphere into a colder one, and, in the other case, from a very cold atmosphere into one of a higher temperature, becomes in the latter case, sensible of warmth, and, in the former, of cold.—Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopedia.

Account of the North Cape, the most northern land of Europe, where the sun never sets.—The North Cape is an enormous rock which projecting far into the ocean, and being exposed to all the fury of the waves, and the outrage of tempests, crumbles every year more and more into ruins. Here every thing is solitary, every thing is sterile; very sad and despondent. The shadowy forest no longer adorns the brow of the mountain; the singing of the birds, which enliven even the woods of Lapland, is no longer heard in the scene of desolation; the ruggedness of the dark grey rock is not covered by a single shrub: the only music is the murmuring of the waves, ever and anon renewing their assaults on the huge masses that oppose them. The northern sun, creeping at midnight at the distance of five diameters along the horizon, and the immeasurable ocean in apparent contact with the skies, form the grand outlines in the sublime picture presented to the astonished spectator. The incessant cares and pursuits of anxious mortals are recollected as a dream; the various energies of animated nature are forgotten; the earth is contemplated only in its elements, and as constituting a part of the solar system.

Having made drawings of those rocks under various aspects, we landed from our boat, and scrambled upon the top of them. We there found some pieces of wood thrown up by the sea, with which we kindled a fire in the face of the frozen ocean, and began to prepare a repast. In looking about for a place to which we might retire with some comfort, we discovered a grotto, formed by three rocks, whose smooth and polished sides indicated that they had heretofore been washed for many ages by the waves of the sea. In the midst of these rocks was a large roundish stone, under which there ran a small stream of water. As we were tracing the course of the stream, which had its source in a neighboring mountain, we found on its margin some excellent plants of Angelica. This we regarded as a great acquisition to our table, because we had found it to be a very refreshing and salubrious vegetable. The grotto was so convenient, that it had the appearance of being the work of art. The stone in the centre served for a table, around which we could place ourselves: and we had only to stoop down to replenish our bowl with water perfectly fresh and sweet, though we were within a few paces of the salt sea.

Saltpetre.—The following interesting article is from the New York Farmer:—"Professor Rafinesque, denounces the use of saltpetre in brine intended for the preservation of animal flesh to be kept for food. That part of the saltpetre which is absorbed by the meat, he says, is nitric acid, or aqua fortis—a deadly poison. Animal flesh, previous to the addition of pickle, consists of gelatinous and fibrous substances, the former only possessing a nutritious virtue. This gelatine is destroyed by the chemical action of salt and saltpetre, and, as the professor remarks, the meat becomes as different a substance from what it should be, as leather is from the raw hide before it is subjected to the process of tanning. He ascribes to the pernicious effects of this chemical change all the diseases which are common to mariners and others who subsist principally on salted meat—such as scurvy, sore gums, decayed teeth, ulcers, &c.; and advises a total abandonment of the use of saltpetre, in the making of pickle for beef, pork, &c. The best substitute for which he says, is sugar—a small quantity rendering the meat sweeter, more wholesome, and equally as durable. These statements ought to be remembered by farmers, butchers, packers of sea provisions, purchasers and consumers. They are of peculiar importance to the latter class—of which some thousands are connected with our own community."

LILLY, WAIT & COMPANY PUBLISH THE People's Magazine.
PROSPECTUS.

THE public are here presented with the first number of a work, which certainly has the claim of novelty upon their attention. Its object is to present the greatest amount of useful information and of solid instruction in the most pleasing and convenient form, and at the lowest possible price. The publishers have it in view to furnish a work for families; one which shall not only satisfy the curiosity and amuse the fancy, but which shall at the same time store the mind with useful knowledge, and prove as attractive to every reader as books of fiction. To effect this purpose, the pages of the work will embrace whatever is most interesting in books of modern travels; entertaining memoirs and biographical anecdotes; curious geographical topics; historical events and details, ancient and modern; remarkable adventures, both by sea and land; valuable discoveries and inventions, particularly in the useful arts; notices of the progress of improvement in all that relates to the comforts and conveniences of life; Natural History, with descriptions of the most remarkable quadrupeds, birds, fishes, reptiles, &c.; also trees, shrubs and plants, together with minerals, including the arts of mining, and descriptions of the most celebrated mines in the world. The various phenomena of nature likewise present subjects of unfailing interest, and to them due attention will be paid.

Such are some of the topics to which the work will be devoted, and no diligence or expense will be spared on the part of the conductors to fill its pages with the most recent and valuable intelligence relating to the various departments of knowledge.

In order to render this Magazine more useful and interesting to readers, a large number of highly-finished Engravings will be inserted, which may serve to convey more accurate ideas of the forms of animals, trees, plants, buildings, cities, and scenes, than any verbal descriptions could do.

The editors will be particularly attentive, in the discharge of their duties, to subjects of interest relating to our own country; and will introduce into each number a brief view of passing events, both domestic and foreign.

On the whole, it is the desire of the publishers to produce a work, that, by its low price and obviously useful and entertaining character, shall secure the favor of the public, and become an inmate of every family.

To assist in the undertaking, the "Penny Magazine," of which two hundred thousand copies are sold weekly in England, besides many other similar publications, are regularly received, and whatever is useful and appropriate in their pages will appear in the pages of this. These resources, with the original contributions, will enable the conductors to fulfil any just expectation that may be formed in regard to the work.

CONDITIONS.—The People's Magazine is published every other Saturday, at One Dollar a year, payable in advance. The postage will be three fourths of a cent, if under 100 miles, and for the greatest distance one cent and a quarter, only. To all who take six or more copies a reasonable discount will be made. Boston, May 25.

PROSPECTUS.

Parley's Magazine
FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

THE design of the publishers, in this Magazine, is to offer to the public an entertaining work for children and youth; one that may become with them a favorite; one that will please and instruct them; one that they will regard not as a thing which they must read as a task, but which they will love to consult as a companion and friend; one, in short, the reading of which may be permitted to good children as a reward, but the denial of which may be felt as a punishment by those who are bad. It will consist chiefly of matters of fact, and the editors will endeavor to present truth and knowledge in a guise, as attractive to the youthful mind, as that in which fiction has generally been arrayed.

The title of the work is chosen, as an indication of what it is intended shall be its character. The style which the author of Peter Parley's Tales has chosen as a vehicle of instruction for youth, will be adopted in its pages, and Peter Parley, in his proper character of story teller and traveller, will often appear as a contributor. The work will comprise pieces adapted to all stages of the youthful faculties from childhood upwards. It may thus pass from hand to hand in the family circle, and the parents will not disdain to find amusement in what they are called upon to explain to their children; while the elder branches will be induced to try to lead on, by easy steps, their still younger companions to that enjoyment which they have already experienced themselves.

The contents of the work will be too various to be enumerated in this place; but in order to convey some idea of the intentions of the conductors, the following may be mentioned as forming a portion of the more prominent subjects.

I. Geographical Descriptions, of manners, customs, and countries.

II. Travels, Voyages, and Adventures, in various parts of the world.

III. Interesting Historical Notices and Anecdotes of each State, and of the United States, as well as of foreign countries.

IV. Biography, particularly of young persons.

V. Natural History, as birds, beasts, fishes, &c.; as well as plants, trees, flowers, &c.

VI. A familiar description of the Objects that daily surround Children in the Parlor, Nursery, Garden, &c.

VII. Original Tales, consisting of Home Scenes, Stories of Adventure, &c., calculated to stimulate the curiosity, exercise the affections, and improve the judgment.

VIII. An account of various trades and pursuits, and some branches of commerce.

IX. Cheerful and pleasing Rhymes, adapted to the feelings and comprehension of youth.

The publishers have made arrangements to have the work abundantly illustrated with spirited engavings, and every effort will be made to render it a useful auxiliary to the cause of education.
