VETERANS ADMINISTRATION

Plans of the Veterans Administration for handling the limitation imposed by Congress on subsistence allowances of veterans in job-training or education takes in to consideration those who are going to enroll later, Mr. Walter E. Quenstedt of the Cambridge Sub-Regional Veterans Administration Office said today.

Congress recently limited the rate of subsistence allowance for these veterans plus earnings from employment to $175 a month for veterans without dependents and $200 for veterans with a dependent or dependents.

Veterans who are not on subsistence rolls now, the Veterans Administration office explained but who enroll or reenroll in school this fall, will receive from the school a form on which to report their expected earnings from outside employment. The Veterans Administration will distribute blank forms to schools this month. Completed forms will be returned to the Baltimore Regional Office, and veterans' subsistence will be based on the information they contain, it was pointed out.

The veteran's outside wages will be studied anew every semester to determine whether they necessitate any adjustment in the amount of subsistence allowance he receives. If the school does not operate on a semester basis, the recheck will be made at regular intervals. Before this recheck is required, Veterans Administration will send veterans a special form on which to report what they have earned since the last report and what they expect to earn during the next period.

A similar procedure is to be followed for veterans who enter or reenter job training from now on, Mr. Quenstedt said. They will receive a form on which to report their expected earning with a certification from their employer. Every four months they will receive another form on which they will indicate what they have actually made in the preceding interval and what they expect to make during the next period. Adjustments, if necessary, will be made on the basis of these regular reports, it was said.

The Cambridge Sub-Regional Veterans Administration Office emphasized that veterans will be advised to fill out these forms promptly, because delay in returning them may mean suspension of subsistence payments. The compensation figures on which subsistence payments will be figured will include wages, salary, commissions, bonuses and other payments received as a result of the veteran's employment or self-employment. It will include regularly scheduled overtime, but not occasional overtime.
