O'Conor Backs Court Revamping

reorganization plan, which has received the backing of William C. Walsh, Attorney General, and many prominent attorneys, provides for a bench of six judges, two from Baltimore and four from the counties.

It would handle appellate work only, changing the present system which requires chief judges to hear cases both on trial and on appeal. As the Court of Appeals is now composed, there is a judge from each of the seven judicial circuits and one from Baltimore.

'It is my hope that the General Assembly will take favorable action in connection with the plans for the reorganization of our Appellate Court," Governor O'Conor declared.

"Over and above all other considerations," he said, "is that of securing the highest order of judicial service in the tribunal. As the court of last resort in our State, the importance of its work cannot be overestimated."

Reiterating that other "highest courts" do only appeals work the Governor asserted they "are not forced to divide their attention and time by taking up in their respective circuits trial work involving matters which sometimes are not of the most important nature."

A VIRGINIA FARMER WROTE US:

"I find my family gets a great deal of pleasure from the use of the telephone. Also, it is quite helpful in the operation of my farm. Very often I receive inquiries from customers who want to deal with me direct when buying my peas and corn.

"Although we haven't had any sickness in the house, it's a great satisfaction to know the telephone is there if I should need a doctor in a hurry."
