George N Sanders' Letter to the President of the United States

We present below to our readers the letter of GEORGE N. SANDERS to JAMES BUCHANAN, President, &c. It is rich, rare, and spicy, written in just that style that will have a tendency to touch the hardened sensibilities of him who now dispenses the patronage of the Government, and may, perhaps, (such things do occur sometimes,) pursuade him to pause for a moment, and consider over the mad career he has marked out for himself, and the host of minions that do his bidding—since he has succeeded in securing the nomination of a disunion candidate, the government pet, JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE.

It will be remembered that the author of this letter is the gentleman who formerly held the appointment of Naval officer of the port of New York under President Buchanan, and the same person who telegraphed from Charleston to the President during the setting of the Democratic Convention, indicating what he believed the better course for the Administration to pursue under the then impending crisis of the Democratic party. The length of the dispatch—the spirit of patriotism and manliness that pervaded it, or the cost of sending it, (we think the latter) threw his august highness, James Buchanan, into such a rage that fears were entertained for his safety. After the adjournment of the Charleston Convention and the subsequent nomination of Douglas for the Presidency, Mr. Sanders came out and endorsed him as the nominee of what he considered the National Democracy. For this exercise of a right guaranteed alike to all, the editorial of the White House sends forth his fiat and the guillotine wielded with the ferocity of a Robespierre, soon sweeps off the political or official head of Sanders.

You can commission another, Mr. President, to fill the position made vacant by his removal, but you cannot destroy that power which God gave him to expose and lay bare one of the most corrupt and degrading administrations with which this country or any other has ever been cursed. We believe that the election of James Buchanan will be the means of showing to the American people such a degree of depravaty, such an utter recklessness in the administration of the offices of our government, that the day will be long distant when another of the same kith and kin will be called upon to occupy his seat. That the present incumbent will pass from the pomp and circumstance of power to that of private life without so much as being remembered, and that when the fourth of March next shall arrive, and his term of partizan and rancor and official usurpation will end by constitutional limitation, the Nation will heave one great, glorious sigh of relief that the sceptre of power has passed from his into higher and nobler hands.

Our feelings have betrayed us into writing more than we intended. We shall now leave the letter speak for itself. It is worth a careful perusal. When each and every one to whom this paper finds its way shall have read it, pass it on to your neighbor, for we think it bears upon its face the impress of truth and has the ring of the true metal.

SANDERS' LETTER.

NEW YORK, 30th July, 1860.

SIR: The popular mind inclines to the sentiment that national self-respect should shield the position of President from any exposure of the delinquencies of the incumbent. The Constitution declares otherwise, and, in your case, it is most healthy for the public, to advance to the constitutional limit. You have, besides, voluntarily entered the lists of partisan discussion, inviting all the consequences of the position.

Your cumulative infidelity to the country.—which has brought us to our present disintegrating condition,—was shadowed forth in the beginning of your Administration by base ingratitude to individuals. Step by step, friend after friend was sacrificed. The fact of a previous obligation chilled you; great service made any one odious. A president should have no animosities. You are governed only by your hates; affection you have none. But two classes have any hold upon you; those who had opposed and reviled and cowed you and the supple parasites who fawn upon you.—Yet, even these cannot be devoted if they would. For the course which is settled on to-day is changed by your vacillating mind to-morrow, and on the morrow the zig-zag programme is changed again. You even endeavor to pursue two opposite courses at once. Witness your open instructions to Gov. Walker, and your private instructions to the Surveyor General, and other officials in Kansas. Witness your late declaration: "Therefore, every Democrat is at perfect liberty to vote as he thinks proper," and your secret circular ordering the dismissal of every office-holder in favor of Douglas. Witness your contradictory declarations abroad. Contradiction upon contradiction!

Not only the political, but the social atmosphere of Washington is poisoned by the upas of your influence. Such is your pernicious course, that the White House is made uncomfortable for visitors by the obtrusion of vicious politicians into your parlors. It should be the patriotic pride of every Administration to make Washington a centre of intellectual brilliancy. But, instead of communing with the best minds of the country, and informing yourself freshly from its different sections, you make the recesses of the Presidential mansion labyrinths of espionage, where the Chief Magistrate sits greedily receiving petty reports of defection among his enslaved office-holders. The wisest and most honored men of the country avoid Washington as a moral pest house.

The Nero like perfidy to individuals which characterized your Administration from the beginning, now marks its close by the betrayal of the great and generous party that has fostered you by its hitherto impregnable organization, from your early days of Federalist-apostacy, down to your last hours of treasonable ingratitude and disunion in the Presidential chair. Never did a man owe so much to a party—never was a party so wantonly betrayed. False alike to persons and party, you have not thought of either but for the shallowest instincts of self.

It is a favorite thought and expression with you that the Federal officers are your personal property. How often have the monocratic words, "my secretaries, my office-holders," grated upon the indignant ears of American citizens assembled in the presence-chamber at the White House! Even the European despotic formula qualifies itself by the less arrogant use of the plural. Instead of inculcating the ennobling idea that their first duty is to their country and to Democratic principle, your rule holds officials to a degrading subserviency; there is not a man of your appointment from Cabinet minister to tide-waiter, who does not live in a state of daily irritation and protest, under your grinding rule. Offices, men, patronage, and public money are classed as your property. There is scarcely a contract made under the Government in which you do not actively participate; not on the side of the people, but for some follower, as instanced in your divisions and sub-divisions of the profits on the Post Office blank printing. The thought never struck you, that it was your duty to save the excess over a reasonable profit, instead of disreputably dividing it among your favorites. Your small politics keep you always in some imaginary administration crisis, and constantly on the lookout for vacant positions for the reward of your partisans of the moment. Positions of consequence are thus not appreciated by you, and are often thrown away or overlooked, whilst inferior positions are swelled into places of importance. Witness your recent varied attemps to get rid of the Paraguay commission, in pursuance of your tactics to lower superior men by offering them inferior positions. The antithesis is seen in the dragging of the sacred ermine of the Supreme Bench into the dust of party arena, to reward your Jeffreys for his famous decisions and sneaking desertion as President of the National Convention.

You have in your Cabinet gentlemen who had a right to look forward to the position you occupy; but following the dictates of a selfish ambition, you have systematically endeavored to weaken every distinguished man of the party who aspired to be your successor. Repeating your worn out expedient of pompously retiring from the contest, you favored no one, but clung to the idea that you might prolong your reign another four year by levelling the chances of others. The extraordinary zeal which you manifested in your advocacy of the Lecompton Constitution, was prompted and principally by the desire of breaking down the formidable rivalship of Robert J. Walker. The triumphant success of Gov. Walker's brave eloquence and skilful statesmanship in Kansas, excited the low passions of your nature. It was then that every appliance of fraud and force was erected into a machine of corruption. For the past twelve months you have nervously watched the Presidential field, driving back any aspirant who appeared to be advancing too rapidly.

Instead of laying aside selfish views, and patriotically coming to the rescue of the Democracy at the recent Convention, you formed an executive and Congressional cabal, to force upon the people a dictatorial nomination and a platform of unreasonable and impracticable issues. A powerful, compact minority of Northern delegates, Federal retainers flagrantly misrepresenting their constituencies and in many cases voting against direct instructions, failed, however to shake the true representatives of the people, who would, perhaps, have, indeed, been justified in bolting a nomination accomplished by means so notorious.—Yet not in the darkest hours of the fierce battles at Charleston and Baltimore—the only fields in which the Federal Executive and Congressional cabal had a particle of power—did the representatives of the people for one moment contemplate abandoning the Convention.—That such a man, and the clique around him, should seduce any large portion of delegates into the mad act of secession, gives only the greater value to our elastic institutions, which so rapidly return the unfaithful magistrate to the comparative harmlessness of private life. The hal'ucination under which you and your coadjutors have been laboring, however, that National Conventions could be controlled by Executive and Senatorial stratagem, was dispelled by the triumph of the people at Baltimore.

The Cincinnati platform was good enough for you, with James Buchanan, that upright, undeviating statesman, upon it; but the brave and true Douglas, because he was not your mouth-piece and shadow, needed a more stringent rule. You were very earnest, during your own canvass, in declarations of the necessity of your election upon the Cincinnati platform, to save the country.—You thought the election of Fremont over yourself and that declaration of principle, was sufficient cause for the dissolution of the Union. Now, with its provisions strengthened, you, as President, are aiding Lincoln with all your oiled machinery. It will be difficult, however, for you to convince the nation that the institutions of the country would be any safer under Lincoln than they would have been under the less fanatical Fremont. Instead of heavily taxing your office-holders to initiate Breckinridge tickets North, it would be brave and generous, comparatively, the result being the same, to order them to go direct for Lincoln. Your hands reeking with Democratic gore, you thus essay to deliver over the betrayd South into the foils of Republican intervention. Your Administration will be marked in history as the fomenter of anarchy and civil war. There is nothing so base that you would not do to prolong your power; madness seems to possess you—to have no successor, to leave no Government behind you—like the miser who clutches his bag of gold in his dying hour, and refuses even to will it to another, lest it should loosen his hold upon it in his last moments.

When the Democratic party was in the throes of its present dismemberment, and you were telegraphed of the fact—a fact which would have awakened painful emotion in the heart of any honest Democrat—the only excitement visible in your sordid nature was intense rage at the cost of the dispatch.

Incongruous associations always accompany political irregularities. The Administration having dragged the party into the vortex of fire, carries with it from the North to the feet of the Disunionists, the place-men, the men spoiled by long official life, imbedded fossils, incapable of arousing themselves to the imminence of the occasion. The young, brave, and gallant patriots of the North are on the side of Douglas and the country—it is the militia of '76 against George III. It is the revolution of '98 against John Adams and old Federalism.

At the seat of government of the States in their united majesty, in a city called after the Father of his country, the presence of whose spirit we can readily imagine, "indignantly frowning upon the attempt to alienate one portion of our countrymen from the rest," was witnessed a few evenings since, the spectacle of his successor inaugurating a division of his own party—the last thing national that the strife of an antagonistic interest had left us as a people; the morale of the position is so low that no honorable mind can fathom its turpitude. The journals inform us that five hundred thousand copies of this address are to be franked through the mail to the people. Ten thousand dollars' worth of bread snatched from your unfortunate office-holders—to many of whom submission or suffering for themselves not only, but for a helpless parent, wife, children, is the only alternative.

Not to speak of the ethics of the whole transaction, the speech is logically a tangled absurdity. Here stands the "rule or ruin" chief of Secession, prating of a united Democracy. Of equality—and what equality has he recognized but the equality of a base submission? Of equality—he, the nurse of fraud on the ballot box. Of union—the tool of the Disunionists.

But the essence of your false life and cheating words is found in the next paragraph: "Every Democrat is at liberty to vote as he thinks proper." Cheers from the crowd of your poor office-holders, who, of course, supposed you meant them; not dreaming that even you could so far forgotten yourself as to inform the sovereign citizens that they were still at liberty to "vote as they thought proper." Having broken up the Convention to prevent the nomination of Douglas, and the adoption of the Cincinnati platform, you then, from the windows of the White House, take a survey of the Baltimore and Richmond candidates and platforms, and coolly tell the democracy that it is "immaterial" which way they go.

The "sustaining-pillar," the two-thirds rule was, you say, "broken to pieces at Baltimore by the Convention which nominated Douglas." Now it was endangered by the unseemly dictation and treacherous combinations of the "old public functionary," who obtained his position in that Convention four years ago by the loyal magnanimity of that Mr. Douglas. You take care, however, to say nothing of the part you played in that transaction. Cunning is the last faculty that leaves the disordered mind. The minority that you marshalled did not believe that they could defeat the nomination of Mr. Douglas by remaining in the Convention, or they certainly would have staid. It was well known to the minority chiefs that Douglas would have received the two-thirds of the entire Convention at Charleston, had there been no secession. But the non-intervention party, unwilling to take a nomination except by a two-thirds vote of all the States, adjourned the Convention to Baltimore. Failing in your plot to make a nomination upon compulsion at Charleston, you redoubled your efforts at Baltimore to effect it or destroy the party. Your efforts may result in the election of Lincoln; but, in any event, you will receive the condemnation of the Democracy of the civilized world for all time. Influenced by your leading idea of the subserviency of the people's Convention to Congressional and Executive dictation, you unwittingly state that if your plans had been successful, no nomination could have been possible against the will of whom? The people? Not at all; against the will of "Congress."

Did regretful silence and modest reserve now indicate in you some sense of the errors of your administrative course, a feeling for our past relations, and that consideration for old age which is due, in innocence or helplessness, would have claimed thought from me. But your insane intermeddling and arrogant dictation, from the position you occupy, with the patronage you wield, make it incumbent upon every patriot who knows you to expose your infirmities, that your deceptive words may have no undue weight falling from the lips of the President of the United States. Your reported declaration in London that you were too old for the Presidency was but too true.—Had I then known your real age, and some points of character revealed by the touch-stone of power, I should have avoided my share in the error of your elevation. Your present shattered condition of mind has, however, undoubtedly been precipitated by the accession of a responsibility which to your view involved only the exercise of a wilful and domineering authority. Uprightness of heart would have saved you even amid the shadows of a declining intellect; but your moral obliquity deprived you of every stay which the virtuous mind possesses against mental weakness. In old age the vices and idiosyncrasies of youth, it is said, often resume their sway, over long years of interested repression.—Your prophetic quotation against yourself six years ago, has been realized but too sadly for your countrymen; would its fulfillment had found you in the oblivion of Wheatland, instead of the chair of Jefferson:

"In life's last stage, what prodigies arise—
Fears of the brave, and follies of the wise;
Down Marlboro's cheeks, the tears of dotage flow,
And Swift expires, a driveller and a show."

CERTIFICATES.

Philadelphia, September 9, 1858.

We have carefully tested the sample of Chesnut Grove Whiskey which you sent us, and find that it contains none of the poisonous substance known as Fusil Oil, which is the characteristic and injurious ingredient of the Whiskeys in general use.

BOOTH, GARRET & CAMAC,

Analytical Chemists.

New York, September 3, 1858.

I have analyzed a sample of Chesnut Grove Whiskey, received from Mr. Charles Wharton, Jr., of Philadelphia, and having carefully tested it, I am pleased to state that it is entirely free from poisonous or deleterious substances. It is an unusually pure and fine flavored quality of Whiskey. JAMES R. CHILTON,

Analytical Chemist.

Boston, March 7, 1859.

I have made a chemical analysis of commercial samples of Chesnut Grove Whiskey, which proves to be free from the heavy Fusil Oils, and perfectly pure and unadulterated. The fine flavor of this Whiskey is derived from the Grain used in manufacturing it.
