SATURDAY MORNING.....JUNE 16, 1883.

OUR GLORIOUS COUNTRY.

There are old men in Detroit who couldn't, if put upon the witness stand, swear within thirty days of the time when corn and potatoes should be planted, what weather is favorable to wheat, or indeed any other point about farming, and yet these are the men most solicitous about the weather and the farmer. On the Woodward avenue car yesterday was a pair, and they began:

"Awful storm, wasn't it?"

"Yes, terrible."

"They say it has ruined the wheat?"

"Don't doubt it, sir. Wheat was just in the right state to be ruined."

"And it has killed the fruit, I presume?"

"It probably has. I don't expect to see an apple or a peach this season."

"Must have rotted the corn?"

"Oh, of course. Corn was just in the susceptible state. We shan't have any corn this year."

"The farmer must be discouraged?"

"Entirely so. My hostler was telling me that the milkman told him that the owner of the dairy had seen a farmer who said that he should plow up his orchard and try to raise a crop of late potatoes."

"Indeed! Still, if we have a late fall so that the wheat can hold on to October, it may ripen."

"Barely possible. I understand that the hay crop has been frozen up."

"Do tell! Seems to me that our live stock could be taught to relish the frozen hay, but I dunno. I think we may confidently expect a drought."

"And a famine."

"And these will probably be followed by an epidemic that will sweep the country."

With this they settled back to enjoy themselves, and neither one betrayed the least interest when a passenger rose up and inquired:

"Won't one of you gentlemen please arrange for Judgment Day to come between this and the 1st of July? I don't want to live in this vain world over six weeks longer!"

A RUSSIAN VILLAGE.

A correspondent writes from Moscow to the N. Y. Sun: Straight from the Kremlin I went to a village about ten miles from Moscow. Two long rows of small wooden houses, about a hundred all told, constitute the village. A brick church, two vodka shops, a country store, and a village office supply the religious, social and political wants of the villagers. There is no school. The people, in their appearance, habits, opinions and belief seem to belong to the twelfth century. In their creed Christian saints are intermixed with pagan gods and goblins. The sorcerer as yet vies with the Christian priest in moral influence over them. The old Russian republican institutions yet baffle all the efforts of modern Russian despotism. Not the czar, but the mir (the people) rule in the village. The peasants ignore the imperial laws, and judge themselves according to their own common law.

The Russian village belongs to the wooden kingdom. The peasants eat with wooden spoons, from wooden cups, plates and bowls, and work with wooden farm implements. Only the ax, the implement of Russian industry and war, is of iron. They use wooden nails. I saw many wagons made without a single nail, or any iron whatever. Through their whole life they recite their prayers before wooden images, and they put wooden crosses over their dead. It looks as if the moujiks were celebrating a perpetual wooden wedding.

The first scene that greeted my eyes in the village was a woman carrying two pails of water on a wooden yoke, and approaching a house before which four little children were playing, surrounded by chickens, dogs and pigs. The woman wore a chemise of coarse linen and a sarafan, a kind of low-cut dress, of coarse black woolen stuff, both of home make. She was barefooted. The children wore a single shirt of coarse linen. Around the village office I found about a dozen idle peasants. They wore shirts and trousers of coarse linen, and soft felt hats, cone-shaped, with narrow brims. In addition some had home-made woolen caftans and heavy boots.

CINDERS IN THE EYE.

Many people know all about the excellence of cardamom seeds (and a dozen other things) to perfume a smoker's breath, who are very ignorant in a matter of far more consequence—a good antidote for cinders in the eye. It will pay travelers to try the simple recipe given below, and put a few seeds of another kind along with the cardamom when starting on a journey. Persons traveling by railway are subject to continued annoyance by flying cinders. On getting into the eyes these are not only painful for the moment, but are often the cause of long suffering that ends in a total loss of sight. A very simple and effective cure is within the reach of every one, and would prevent much suffering and expense were it generally known. It is simply one or two grains of flaxseed. These may be placed in the eye without injury or pain to that delicate organ, and shortly they begin to swell and dissolve a glutinous substance that covers the ball of the eye, enveloping any foreign substance that may be in it. The irritation of cutting the membrane is thus prevented, and the annoyance may soon be washed out. A dozen of these stowed away in the vest pocket may prove in an emergency worth their number in gold.

A BEAUTIFUL REFLECTION

Bulwer eloquently says: I can not believe that earth is man's abiding place. It cannot be that our life is cast up by the ocean of eternity to float upon its waves and sink into nothingness; else, why is it that the glorious aspirations which leap like angels from the temple of our hearts, are forever wandering about unsatisfied? Why is it that the rainbows come over us with a beauty that is not of this earth, and then pass off and leave us to muse upon their favored loveliness? Why is it that the stars, which hold their festivals around the midnight throne, are set above the grasp of our limited faculties, forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? And, finally, why is it that bright forms of human beauty are presented to our view, and then taken from us, leaving the thousands of streams of our affections to flow in Alpine torrents upon our hearts?

We are born for a higher destiny than that of earth; there is a realm where the rainbow never fades, and where stars will spread before us like islands that slumber in the ocean; where the beings that pass before us like shadows will stay in our presence forever.

LITTLE TOMMY.

Little Tommy was entertaining one of his sister's callers until she appeared.

"Don't you come to see my sister?" he inquired.

"Yes, Tommy, that's what I come for."

"You like her a good deal, don't you?"

"Of course, I admire her very much. Don't you think she is nice?"

"Well, I reckon I have to 'cause she's my sister, but she thumps me pretty tough sometimes. But say, les see you open your mouth once. Now shut it real tight till I count ten.—There, I knowed you could do it."

"Why, Tommy, who said I couldn't?"

"Oh, nobody much, but sister."

"What did she say?"

"Well, she said you hadn't sense enough to keep your mouth shut, and I bet her two big oranges you had, and you have, ain't you, and you'll make her duff up the oranges, won't you?"

The young man didn't wait to see whether she would "duff up" or not.

AT THE BANK—Cashier: "Excuse me, madam, but your account is rather overdrawn." Mrs. Maltravers (whose husband is off on business and has left her a check-book): "Oh, Mr. Cashier! that can't be possible. I've got lots of checks left yet."

Will also keep a full supply on hand in my yard, where I will be pleased to see my friends and the public generally.

All orders left at the yard or at Adams' Express office, Chestertown, will receive prompt and careful attention.

Thankful for past favors, hope to merit a large percentage of public patronage.
