Yaller Dog

DETE was my dog from the very first. I picked him up one day when I was down in Eastbourne. Seems he took to me right off, and after that he never made friends with another soul except once. Just once. The same day that I picked up Pete I met Nellie Roach. I lived alone way up on Pine mountain. Hunted. Every so often I'd get fed up bein' alone. Then I'd beat it down to Eastbourne in

This time I'd had the likker first which accounted for the mess I got myself into. I'd had just enough to make me irresponsible when I got attached to the stray, Pete, and then met up with Nellie Roach. She was just as much fed up on the town as I was on Pine mountain and she was lonesome.

My hand shook as I cocked my gun, I was so darned surprised. But before I could pull the trigger something happened that surprised me still more. Old Pete ran right up to the man with his fool tail awaggin' fit to kill and jumps all over him like he was his long-lost brother.

The man dropped down into the bushes and disappeared. I yelled to Pete: "You gosh-dummed fool you! You crazy old cur!" He crouched down with his tail between his legs as if he had a guilty conscience. By the time I got back to the shack I was clean out of temper. I told Nellie what had happened and insted of bein' ready for me with one of her enappy remarks her face got as red as a brick and she turned around and began to stir something on the stove with all her might.

Next day I had to go down to Eastbourne and I asked Nellie to go but she shook her head. I asked the sheriff if he had a picture of that convict. He pulled one out. It was the very feller I had seen and there was reward offered fer him-a thousand ollars. Next day I told Nellie I was goin' huntin' fer the day, but I didn't go far and I didn't take old Pete. Right back of the house was a clump of bushes. I hid there. Pretty soon I saw Nellie come out and hang up a plece of red petticoat on a stick. It gave me a turn.

Sure enough, after a time, here comes this convict bird. Nellie hugs him and old Pete begins his jumpin' act. I got out my gun and aimed it right at his back. I could shoot him or I could walk up on him, capture him and claim the reward. Instead, I put the gun down.

"What the h-I's the use?" I said to myself. "Maybe both the poor devils'll be happier if I go away and leave 'em." shifted my hunting pack on my shoulders, for I was goin' a long ways. 1b. 19c I was goin' to Africa to hunt lions, and I wasn't takin' no yaller dog.
