The Silver Rule.

If "do unto others as you would have others do unto you" is the Golden Rule, "Mind your own business" is the Silver Rule. And, upon second thought, I believe we may obtain the benefits of both rules in the latter.

It isn't a pleasant thing to acknowledge but I believe nine persons out of every ten meddle with their neighbors business. They may not carry it to the extent that the old lady did, when she crept like a thief into her neighbor's clothesyard to ascertain whether the stockings upon the line were darned or patched; but that we do, sometimes, meddle with what is none of our business, is undeniable.

If our neighbor displays more style than we think his circumstances warrant, we are quite willing, and some times anxious to learn whether he pays as he goes, or not. And among the ladies (bless them) the habit of minding the business of the neighbors gets to be almost a mania.

They know to a dime the cost of every dress and bonnet that comes to their church, and whether the minister's wife wears imported gloves, or gloves of home manufacture. Madame knows to a dollar the worth of every set of jewelry on her visiting list, and if there is a set of false diamonds, it is whispered about, and commented upon.

But not alone among the women does this habit prevail. The men are equally ready to break the Golden Rule, and I'll tell you some of their ways one of these days.

Meanwhile, let us carefully attend to our own business, that we may have time to attend to that of our neighbors when we have a convenient opportunity.

The Philosophy of Mosquito Bites.

The philosophy of mosquito bites is thus cheerfully explained by an amiable savant. It will be read with feeling interest: The microscope reveals the fact that he carries a pair of scissors inside of his proboscis; the neatest and sharpest little cutting tools you ever saw. He gets his living by these. They are two delicate little blades, and are placed along side each other. When he is ready to make a meal off of us he first buzzes around with those beautiful wings, and sings a pleasant little song. If we let him quietly settle down, he picks out a place on our loin which is just to his liking. He is very delicate about it.—When he gets ready he puts his proboscis down, and pushes the little scissors out, and makes a neat cut, so that he can suck the blood out. Then he drinks as much blood as he wants, and is done his dinner. But he does not leave yet. He is going to pay his bill. He has taken our blood, and will leave us something in exchange for it. He has the pay in his pocket, ready to squeeze out before he goes. It is poison, but that makes no difference to him. It is the best he has to give us.—His poison pocket is at the head of his proboscis, and at the lower end of his proboscis he has another little pocket, into which he puts poison enough for one dose. This poison is so very powerful that a very little makes the place where the musquito puts it very sore. It is not the bite or cut that the musquito makes, that hurts us, but the dropping of this powerful poison into our flesh.

How to Hang Pictures.

Every picture should be hung with its horizon on a level with the eye of a spectator of ordinary stature, and there should be a clear space of three feet at least between the larger pictures, and two feet between the smaller ones, which space should be filled up, if possible, with velvet of a dark maroon color. A flock paper, with slight pattern and all of one color, is the next best thing to velvet.

The supreme merit of any collection is unity. Every picture ought to illustrate and help the rest. And if the buyer keeps in view some great leading purpose, the unity will most likely come of itself, but it cannot be easily reached otherwise. Mere miscellaneous buying, according to the caprice of the moment, leads to the raking together of unrelated objects, but not to that beautiful and helpful order, which multiplies a million fold the value of every particle.—From "Hamerton's Thoughts about Art."

RECREATION.—When a man is hungry let him eat; when thirsty, drink; when sleepy, sleep; when stiff with sitting let him run, dance and jump; when overworked and jaded let him recreate himself.

Let every man give himself to some useful and honorable work—a work that taxes his best faculties. Then let this man keep his mind and body as he should his tools or capital, in good working order—sometimes by fasting, sometimes by friskiness, sometimes by "popular amusements;" at other
