Farmers' Department.

"He who by the plow would thrive,
Himself must either hold or drive."

PLASTER, ASHES, &c.

There is no product of nature which can be turned to better account by the farmer than plaster. And yet it is not in itself a manure. A writer on Agricultural topics says: "There are only five commonly cultivated crops which contain plaster in any sensible proportions, and of these there are raised in this country—lucerne, red clover and turnips." We cannot refrain from asking why such a writer alludes to plaster at all? What is plaster, and by what means does it act upon vegetation? Like charcoal it has but one office to perform It is a deodorizer. That is, it absorbs ammonia (bad smells,) the most active of all manurial agents, and yields them up to the demand of any vegetable coming in contact with it. It has been asserted, and there are certainly good philosophical reasons to sustain the assertion, that if a field of any given size were divided into sections, the outer ones being annually manured and the interior ones heavily plastered, that after a few years that plastered land will be the richest part of the field. The reason for this is that the plaster seizes upon the ammonia escaping from that portion of the field which has been manured, and in all the vicissitudes of the season locks it in its impassive folds until it is brought in contact with vegetable life to which alone it yields up its treasure. In the meantime itself remains intact in the soil, ready again to perform in the same way. But there is this difference between the two. While charcoal is an active deodorizer, it has very little if any effect in changing the species of plants already growing upon this soil. This office both plaster and ashes perform with most wonderful facility. It was once our fortune to come into possession of a wornout pasture badly overgrown with moss. To eradicate this was an important matter in our mind, and this we desired to do without plowing.—We resorted to the use of plaster and ashes in alternate sections. On certain of these patches of moss we spread plaster and on others ashes. Two years after the moss-grown patches were luxuriant beds of white clover. To which of these agents we ought to award the preference was a question which we would not attempt to solve. They both performed their part to our satisfaction and even astonishment. The use of plaster in stables, outhouses, hencoops, piggeries, &c., is a matter of the greatest importance.—The stench which escapes from these noisome places is alike intolerable, slovenly and wasteful. It is the life of vegetation that assails the nostrils as one approaches these places, on its way to the forests. Arrested and worked up by an application of plaster or fine charcoal, or even dry earth, and applied to the cornfield or orchard, it would enliven the growing crop, giving it a greener tinge and more luxuriant appearance, and increasing the yield in a wonderful ratio to the expense of saving it.

An Experiment in Feeding Horses.

The London Omnibus Company use six thousand horses. To economize in feed is an important matter, and has led to several tests, the result of which is recorded as follows: To each of three thousand of their horses they gave a daily allowance of ground oats sixteen pounds, ground hay seven and one-half pounds, and cut straw one and one-eighth pounds—the hay and straw being cut into pieces about half an inch long, and well mixed up with oats in a little water, and so making twenty-six pounds of food for each horse. And to each of the other three thousand horses they gave a daily allowance of whole or unbruised oats nineteen pounds, and uncut or whole hay and straw thirteen pounds, without any water, in our old fashioned way, making thirty-two pounds of this food for each horse. And what was the result? Why, it was soon discovered that the horses which were fed on the twenty-six pounds of ground oats remained in as good condition and could perform as much work, and do just as well, too, as horses did which consumed thirty two pounds of food as aforesaid, thus showing a saving of six pounds of food per day in favor of bruised oats and cut hay and straw, which, if valued at five cents per horse per day, amounted to a saving of the neat little sum of $300 per day.

How to Water Plants.

From careful experiments, Mr. Mechi discovered that plants slightly watered every day often perish, and always become dwarfed; whereas a good soaking given twice a week almost invariably proved very beneficial. He says:

The sum of our experience in watering amounts to this—that thorough soaking of the ground two or three times a week is much better than the same amount of water applied in driblets daily, only sufficient to wet the upper surface, but not the under strata of earth contiguous to the roots. Cold spring water should, before applying it to a heated soil, be allowed to stand exposed to the sun and air for a few hours. The colder the water is, and the warmer the soil, so is the necessity of applying it in abundance; for it is evident, though we cannot explain it, that the result produced upon plants by applying cold water to the soil, when at a high temperature, unless so copiously applied as to saturate the soil completely, is fatal to tender or weakly plants, and often more or less injurious to strong or healthy ones.

REMEDY FOR OVERFLOW OF THE GALL.—A sure preventative of the overflowing of the gall in cattle is soot and salt, given in equal quantities once a week, or as occasion may require. If soot is not convenient, copperas with salt to the amount of one teaspoonful to a creature, answers a good purpose. When cattle get very weak from the effects of this disease (which they sometimes will in the best condition) take eggs, turn out the whites, and fill the shells with soot and salt, and give three at a time, three mornings in succession, and then omit three, and so on until you have given three times, which has always effected a cure. A symptom of the disease is a dull, sunken eye, discharging a yellowish, watery substance.

BEST HORSES FOR FARM USE.—The hardest work on the farm for horses is breaking up the sod, which is certainly not one-eighth of the whole work. Light horses, weighing 1,100 or 1,300 are the best for most of the other work; they are the best on the road and before the harrow, (not before the mower and reaper we think.) As cross-plowing and harrowing, a coach horse will do one-fourth more than a heavy draft horse; besides it costs much more to keep the heavy horse, and on sandy or wet soil he shits so much as to worry him. For all uses which the farmer has for horses, the medium sized or coach horses are the best.

THE Wilmington Commercial gives the following as a sure cure for chicken cholera: Roast a quantity of the Dandelion Root and reduce it to powder, mixing it in the feed and administering three times a week.

How to Arrange Flowers.

Flowers may be arranged either according to the harmony or contrast of colors. Red harmonizes with orange, orange with yellow, violet with red, indigo to orange, yellow and violet to bluish green. To find the contrast to any flower, cut a small circular piece out of its petals, place it upon white paper, look at it steadily with one eye for a few seconds without letting the eyelids close, then look from the colored circle to another part of the white paper, when a circle of another color will be apparent; this color is the true contrast, or complementary color. Tastes differ as to whether the effect of arranging flowers according to contrast or complimentary color is more pleasing to the eye than according to harmonies. The former, however, is the most in favor. To carry it out, a blue flower should be placed next to an orange flower, a yellow near a violet, and a red or white should have plenty of foliage around it. White contrasts with blue or orange, or still better with red or pink, but not with yellow or violet.

HORACE GREELEY AT HOME.—The New York World has been visiting Mr. Greeley at Chappaqua, and describes the house as having a large French roof, entirely concealed by the foliage of the trees:

The farm contains about seventy-five acres, for the most part covered with little trees. The branches have all been trimmed, it is said, by Mr. Greeley himself, who, when he goes to Chappaqua, walks over his farm to see what is necessary to be done. On Saturday last he started in his shirt sleeves, with his axe, for the woods, where he cut down a number of trees. At 6 o'clock, P. M., he was summoned to New York by a dispatch. By 2 o'clock on Sunday the village was filled with strangers. The Chappaqua House, which is the only hotel in the place, was the rendezvous for the disappointed people, who, while they were waiting for the 5 P. M. train, conversed on the chances of the new candidate, and the fine appearance of his farm. The village is small, containing probably three or four hundred people. It has five or six stores, a hotel, two livery stables, and a billiard room. All the water used in the village is obtained by means of pipes from Mr. Greeley's farm.

Pleasures of an Ocean Voyage.

I have listened in my time, with more or less pleasure, to the very rollicking songs about the sea, the flashing brine, the spray and the tempest's roar, the wet sheet and the flowing sea, a life on the ocean wave, and all the rest of it. To paraphrase a land proverb, let me write the songs of the sea, and I care not who goes to sea and sings 'em. A square yard of solid ground is worth miles of the pitching, turbulent stuff. Its inability to stand still for one second is the plague of it. To lie on deck when the sun shines and swing up and down, while the waves run hither and thither and toss their white caps, is all well enough; to lie in your narrow birth and roll from side to side all night long; to walk up hill to your stateroom door, and, when you get there, find you have got to the bottom of the hill, and opening the door is like lifting up a trap door in the floor; to deliberately start for some object, and before you know it to be flung against it like a bag of sand; to attempt to sit down on your sofa and find you are sitting up, to slip and slide and grasp at everything within reach, and to meet everybody leaning and walking on a slant, as if a heavy wind were blowing, and the laws of gravitation were reversed; to lie in your birth and hear all the dishes on the cabin table go sousing off against the wall in a general smash; to sit at table holding your soup plate with one hand and watching for a chance to put your spoon in when it comes high tide on your side of the dish; to vigilantly watch the lurch of the heavy dishes while holding your glass and your plate and your knife and fork, and not to notice it when Brown, who sits next to you, gets the whole swash of the gravy from the roast beef dish on his light-colored pantaloons, and to see the look of dismay that only Brown can assume on such occasion; to see Mrs. Brown advance to the table, suddenly stop and hesitate, two waiters rush at her, with whom she struggles wildly, only to go down with them in a heap in the opposite corner; to see her partially recover, but only to shoot back again through her stateroom door, and be seen no more; all this is quite pleasant and refreshing if you are tired of land, but you get quite enough of it in a couple of weeks.—Saunterings by C. D. Warner.

THE EUREKA FANNING MILL.

THE GREATEST INVENTION OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY!

Farmers Look to Your Interest!

THE attention of Farmers and Mechanics is particularly directed to the combined economy, utility and practicability of the Eureka Mill, and to the many other advantages it possesses over every other Fanning Mill which has been introduced to the public.

It is the fruit of long and patient investigation by the inventor, who has made it his constant study for over twenty years. He has secured several patents for Mills, and has always been rewarded with the best of success. But not feeling satisfied with his former attainments, he determined to reach the climax, and he now believes that his new invention will warrant him in exclaiming in the joy of his heart, like the philosopher, Phythagoras—EUREKA!—signifying in the Greekish language, "I have found it." This has given the name to this new Mill.

In this Mill are all the former improvements to which have been added several more, adding still greater advantages than were at first anticipated, or even thought possible by the inventor himself. It embraces the three great essentials necessary in every invention:

It combines ECONOMY, UTILITY and PRACTICABILITY!

THE "EUREKA" MILL

is small and lighter, and is capable of doing more and better work in a given time than any other Mill ever invented.

IT IS THE ONLY MILL

that will successfully remove from wheat all such pests as Cockle, Garlic, Oats, Rye, &c.

Should an extra quality of grain for seed or gristing purposes be required, it can be so arranged as to catch in one box perfect grain, and in the other, grain fit for market or mill. Here is made a great saving usually lost sight of: for nearly one quarter of the grain cleaned in the common Mills is lost when sown, on account of shrunken kernels and inferior grain. The Eureka Mill saves all this, and gives seed every kernel of which will grow when put into the ground, and this saving will, in a short time, pay for the Mill.

Owners of the Mill, are having them manufactured at the Sash Factory and Planing Mill of Noland & Co., Port Deposit, Md., which is a guarantee that they will be put up in the best manner. je17-tf.
