Bel Air, Md., January 13, 1888. THE FUNNY MAN. Who is that man who sits and bites His pen with aspect solemn; He is the Funny Man who writes The weekly Comic Column. By day he scarce can keep awake;
At night he cannot rest,
His meals he hardly dares to take—
He jests, he can't digest.

His bair, though not with years, 's white, His cheek is wan and pale,
And all with seeking day and night
For jokes that are not stale. His joys are few; the chlefest one
Is when by luck a word
Suggests to him a novel pun
His readers haven't heard. And when a Yankee joke he sees In some old book—well, then Perhaps he gains a moment's ease.

And makes it do again. The thought that chiefly makes him sigh Is that a time must come When jokes extinct like mammoths lie, And jokers must be dumb. When every quip to death is done,
And every crank is told;
When men have printed every pun,
And every joke is old;

When naught in heaven or earth or sea Has not been turned to chaff. And not a single oddity ls left to make us laugh.

Relics in the Alps. There have recently been discovered in the high Alps near the summit of the great St. Beinard five large granite altars and a number of other relics of the stone age, such as axes, knives, &c., used in the pagan epochs for sacrifices. Swiss writers emphasize the historical importance of this discovery in that it is a proof that St. Bernard was a place of sacrifice in pagan times, and also that as far back as the age of stone the Canton Valais was inhabited by human beings.—Public
