AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

The Better Education of Farmers.

We are apt to take too much of dollar and-cent view of agricultural education. In so many years, a young man could earn so much money, will it pay him to give this up in order that he may get an education which will enable him in later life to make more money than he could without it? Will any education that can be gained at schools make a better money-getter of a boy than would the same amount of time and attention given to learning the practical operations of the farm?

Without stopping to answer these propositions—which are foreign to our purpose—we desire to call attention to other considerations that must have weight with all thoughtful persons. The greatest prosperity of farmers, as a class and individually, must come from causes which will advance farmers, as an occupation. No permanent and satisfactory prosperity can attend any calling which is not held in good repute, and no calling in these modern days can be held in good repute which is not represented by a least a fair proportion of men of education and intelligence. In the so-called "professions," in mechanics, and in trades, the tendency is toward better and better education and a more and more cultivated intelligence, and the degree of respect in which they are severally held is in all cases proportionate to the intelligence of its representative men.

In the future allotment of honor and influence, and consequently of prosperity, that calling will take the lead whose representative men are the most distinguished for education and cultivation, and that will fall to the rear in which there has been the least progress in these respects. The road of the future is an ascending one, and progress over it is to be secured much more by the aid of matter. Those who take and keep the lead in the race will do so because of their brains rather than of their bodies, and the leadership will imply control over those who are behind (and therefore beneath) them. How far their rule will depend on conditions which we can not now foresee, but that they will rule is as certain as that mind has always ruled over brute force. If farmers can take the lead, farming will be a favored and a fortunate occupation. If they must fall to the rear, it will be a degraded and an unfortunate one.—Whether it is one or the other, depends on the extent to which farmers are educated and enabled to stand a fair chance in the "struggle for the lead," and our successors will be the lords of the land or a downtrodden peasantry, according as they are educated or not. We assume, of course, that prosperity and intelligence will go hand in hand, and that as we gain in education we shall gain in wealth.—At the same time, we believe that the chance for the future of our craft lies in the ability of its representatives to take a high stand for education and intelligence. Believing this, we long for the better general education of farmers; not of those of the farmers' sons who are destined for other occupations, but especially for those who are to stay on the farm. Let us bring better-trained brains to the performance of our work, and shed the light of cultivation and refinement over our hearth stones, and we may confidently look for a success which mere wealth could not secure.—American Agriculturist.

How Clover Improves the Soil.—Professor Voelcker explains the action of clover in increasing the fertility of the soils as follows: All who are practically acquainted with the subject must have seen that the best crops of wheat are produced by being preceded by crops of clover grown for seed. I have come to the conclusion that the very best preparation, the very best manure, is a good crop of clover. A vast amount of mineral manure is brought within reach of the corn crop, which otherwise would remain in a lock-up condition in the soil. The clover plants take nitrogen from the atmosphere, and manufacture it into their own substance, which, on decomposition of the clover roots and leaves, produces abundance of ammonia. In reality, the growing of clover is equivalent, to a great extent, to manuring with Peruvian guano; and in this paper of mine I show that you obtain a larger quantity of manure than in the largest dose of Peruvian guano which a farmer would ever think of applying. It is only by carefully investigating subjects like the one under consideration that positive proofs are given, showing the correctness of intelligent observers in the field.

Fowls Eating Feathers.—"Some of my fowls have acquired the habit of picking and eating their feathers. Will the habit spread in the flock, and is there any cure?"

Hens acquire this habit oftimes from being deprived of animal food. Fowls are omnivorous feeders, and require such food. In the summer when they have their liberty, they can unusually supply themselves; but in winter this is more difficult. Give them fresh meat, or offal chopped fine, or livers; this last is particularly grateful to fowls. They often acquire the habit of picking from each other, during the moulting season, and in this way may learn it from each other.—If a fresh meat diet does not break them of the habit, fatten and kill those addicted to it.

A German Method to Grass a Bank.—For each square rod to be planted, take half a pound of lawngrass seed and mix it intimately and thoroughly with six cubic feet of good, dry garden earth, and loam. This is placed in a tub, and liquid manure, diluted with about two-thirds of water is added and well stirred in so as to bring the whole to the consistency of mortar. The slope is to be cleaned and made perfectly smooth, and then well watered, after which the paste just mentioned is to be applied with a trowel, and made even and thin as possible. Should it crack by exposure to the air, it is to be again watered and smoothed up day by day, until the grass makes its appearance, which will be in from eight to fourteen days, and the whole declivity will soon be covered with a close carpet of green.

Profits of the Pen.—Some years ago an eminent publisher gave Lord Lytton £20,000 for the use of twenty of his novels for a railway library. It is said that this is the largest sum ever paid in England for a copyright. The most successful publications of the day, however, from this point of view, are not novels, but sermons. It is said that the representatives of the late Rev. F. W. Robertson, of Brighton, have received, in the course of some years, upwards of £20,000 for the publication of the various volumes left at his death.

Cuyler must be persevering in San Francisco, for he has just secured the mortgage of a man named Arkelsumtelturf.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Improvements.—The Centreville Observer says: In traveling over the Queen Anne's and Kent Railroad one cannot but be struck with the improved condition of things along the line. The village of Sudlersville has been much improved since the opening of the road. Two or three new stores and several new dwellings have been added to the town, and the once sleepy village looks as if in the not very distant future it will be a town of size and importance. Millington was partially destroyed by fire a few months since, but it does not seem to groan much under the mishap. New stores and dwellings are being added to the place, and Millington to-day is perhaps in a more prosperous condition than ever before. They have in this town a live building association, which builds houses and sells or rents them, it matters not much which, so far as the progress of the town is concerned. Massey's Morris, Vandyke's and Townsend have also improved, and neat little cottages now take the place of woods, bushes and sedge. The country through which the road passes has also improved. The free use of lime and manure has brought it up to a high standard, and indeed, it may be said that we now live in a live, prosperous country which is every day becoming more valuable.

How Drinking Causes Apoplexy.—It is the essential nature of all wines and spirits to send an increased amount of blood to the brain. The first effect of taking a glass of wine or stronger form of alcohol is to send the blood there faster than common, hence the circulation that gives the red face. It increases the activity of the brain, and it works faster, and so does the tongue. But the blood goes to the brain faster than common, it returns faster, and no special harm results. But suppose a man keeps on drinking, the blood is sent to the brain so fast, in such large quantities, that in order to make room for it the arteries have to enlarge themselves; they increase in size, and in doing so they press against the more yielding and flaccid veins, which carry the blood out of the brain, and thus diminish their size, the result being that the blood is carried to the arteries of the brain faster than is natural or healthful, but it is prevented from leaving it as fast as usual; hence a double set of causes of death are in operation. A man may drink enough brandy or other spirits in a few hours, or even a few minutes, to bring on a fatal attack of apoplexy.

The Queen of Sheba's palace is the latest archæological discovery announced. M. Mauch, the African traveller, who some years ago discovered what he believed were the ruins of ancient Oplin, but the accuracy of whose supposition called in question at the time, now writes with the greatest confidence that he has finally found the "Oplin," in latitude 20° south, longitude 26° east. The ruins consist of two masses of edifices, and among them is to be remarked one which is an imitation of the temple of Solomon, the walls being built of wrought granite, and the ceiling still showing fragments of beams of cedar. The circular edifice, supposed to be the Queen's palace, is still called by the natives the "House of the Great Princess." This discovery, if authenticated, must be accepted as another link of evidence unearthed in confirmation of the Scriptures, to which many more will doubtless be added by the parties now exploring in and around Jerusalem and beyond the Jordan.

Curious Needles.—The King of Prussia recently visited a needle manufactory in his kingdom, in order to see what machinery, combined with the human hand, could produce. He was shown a number of superfine needles, thousands of which together did not weigh half an ounce, and marvelled how such minute objects could be pierced with an eye. But he was to see in this respect even something still finer and more perfect could be created. The borer—that is, the workman whose business it is to bore the eyes in these needles—asked for a hair from the monarch's head. It was readily given, and with a smile he placed it at once under the boring machine, turned a hole in it with the greatest care, furnished it with a thread, and then handed the singular needle to the astonished king. The second curious needle is in the possession of Queen Victoria. It was made at the celebrated needle manufactory at Beddich, and represents the column of Trajan in miniature. This well known Roman column is adorned with numerous scenes in sculpture, which immortalize Trajan's heroic actions in the war. On this diminutive needle scenes in the life of Queen Victoria are represented in relief, but so finely cut and so small that it requires a magnifying glass to see them. The Victoria needle can, moreover be opened; it contains a number of similar size, which are equally adorned with scenes in relief.

A Lucky Conductor.—The thousand-dollar bill which Conductor McKinney took from a stranger on the Owl train between New Haven and this city, more than a year ago, is still on deposit to Mr. McKinny's credit at one of the city banks. The interest has amounted to over one hundred dollars. It will be remembered that the conductor, when the bill was handed him, passed on, saying he would change it when he had gone through the train. When he returned the man denied having presented a thousand-dollar bill. He was probably a thief, and gave the money by mistake, and was afraid to rectify it. At all events, Mr. McKinney thinks a good night's work.—Hartford Courant.

A young couple were sitting together in a romantic spot, with birds and flowers above them, when the following dialogue ensued: "My dear, if the sacrifice of my life would please thee, most gladly would I lay it at thy feet." "Oh, sir, you are too kind! But it first reminds me that I wish you'd leave off using tobacco."—"Can't think of it. It's a habit to which I am wedded." "Very well, sir; since this is the way you lay down your life for me, and as you are already wedded to tobacco, I'll take good care you are never wedded to me, as it would be bigamy."

A baby lately had the misfortune to swallow the contents of an ink-bottle.—Its mother, with wonderful presence of mind, immediately administered a box of steel pens and two sheets of foolscap paper, and the child has felt write inside ever since.

THE EUREKA FANNING MILL.

THE GREATEST INVENTION OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY!

Farmers Look to Your Interest!

THE attention of Farmers and Mechanics is particularly directed to the combined economy, utility and practicability of the Eureka Mill, and to the many other advantages it possesses over every other Fanning Mill which has been introduced to the public.

It is the fruit of long and patient investigation by the inventor, who has made it his constant study for over twenty years. He has secured several patents for Mills, and has always been rewarded with the best of success. But not feeling satisfied with his former attainments, he determined to reach the climax, and he now believes that his new invention will warrant him in exclaiming in the joy of his heart, like the philosopher, Phythagoras—EUREKA!—signifying in the Grecian language, "I have found it." This has given the name to this new Mill.

In this Mill are all the former improvements to which have been added several more, adding still greater advantages than were at first anticipated, or even thought possible by the inventor himself. It embraces the three great essentials necessary in every invention:

It combines ECONOMY, UTILITY and PRACTICABILITY!

THE "EUREKA" MILL

is small and lighter, and is capable of doing more and better work in a given time than any other Mill ever invented.

IT IS THE ONLY MILL

that will successfully remove from wheat all such pests as Cockle, Garlic, Oats, Rye, &c.

Should an extra quality of grain for seed or gristing purposes be required, it can be so arranged as to catch in one box perfect grain, and in the other, grain fit for market or mill. Here is made a great saving usually lost sight of: for nearly one quarter of the grain cleaned in the common Mills is lost when sown, on account of shrunken kernels and inferior grain. The Eureka Mill saves all this, and gives seed every kernel of which will grow when put into the ground, and this saving will, in a short time, pay for the Mill.

HINES & BURCHINAL,

Chestertown, Maryland,

Owners of the Mill, are having them manufactured at the Sash Factory and Planing Mill of Noland & Co., Port Deposit, Md., which is a guarantee that they will be put up in the best manner. je17-tf.
