Grist and Saw MILLS FOR SALE.

IN view of a contemplated change in his ous iness, the undersigned will sell at Private sale his Grist and Saw

WILLS,

with

46 Acres of Land,

attached. The Location of these Mills are high-ly favorable; they lie on the head waters of Fairlee Creek, in Kent county, Maryland; are within mile of navigable water for grain boats, while at boats or scows may be be loaded at the door of the Grist Mill.

They are convenient to places of public worship, and a good school; and are surrounded by some of the most highly improved and best timbered farms in the county. Of the 46 acres of Land, there are 3 or 4 acres of

and two acres of

Driving Chesnut,

the balance is arable and in a high state of cultivation. There are also

TWO ORCHARDS,

one Apple and the other Peach.

Both Mills are in complete and substantial order, having been thoroughly rebuilt within a few months. There are other improvements, such as a

Frame Dwelling House

with Kitchen attached, Corn House and Stable, all in good order.

It may be asserted with the utmost confidence that in view of the advantages of the location of these Mills, their present complete order, and the fair and easy terms upon which they may be purchased, no better bargain has been offered for many years in this county, to the man of enterprise and small capital.

WM. BACCHUS,

Green Point Farm For Rent.

THE subscriber has concluded to rent the above property for a certain sum or a grain rent. None need apply but those who can produce good recommendations for morality and industry. They must be neat, practical and competent farmers. Possession immediately. Should the tenant give full satisfaction it is probable he can remain for several years. For terms, &c., apply by letter or in person to JOHN S. BENNARD, No. 86 Market st., Wilmington Del, or to G. VICKERS, Chestertown.

Thos. B. Hynson

RESPECTFULLY announces to the public that he has just returned from Philadelphia and Baltimore with a large and well stock of

of every style and quality suitable for the trade and will be sold at the lowest possible prices, for cash or trade.

Owing to the great pressure in the money market in the Atlantic cities, and the lateness of the season, he flatters himself that he has laid in his stock at such unusually low rates as will enable him to dispose of it to his customers at very low prices.

In conclusion he returns his sincere thanks to his friends and customers for the liberal patronage heretofore extended to him, and still hopes by fair dealing and stict attention to business to merit the confidence and esteem of the public.

POETRY.

VESPERS.

A row of little faces by the bed—
A row of little hands up in the spread—
A row of little roguish eyes all closed—
A row of little naked feet exposed.

A gentle mother leads them in their praise,
Teaching their feet to lead in heavenly ways,
And takes this lull in childhood's tiny tide,
The little errors of the day to chide

Tumbling headlong into waiting beds,
Beneath the sheets they hide their timid heads,
Till slumber steals away their fears,
And like a peeping bud each face appears.

All dressed like angels in their glows of white,
They're wafted to the skies in dreams of night
And heaven will sparkle in their eyes at morn,
And stolen graces all their ways adorn.

The Faithful Sentinel.

AN INCIDENT OF NAPOLEON'S TIME.

The French army lay encamped only about a day's march from Berlin. It was on the 23rd of October. The sentine's were doubled, and the most strict order given, for the Prussian and Austrian spies were plenty and troublesome. At midnight Pierrie Sancoin was stationed at one of the outposts. He was a stout, bold, shrewed man, and a good soldier.

The colonel of his regiment was with the sergeant on his bout, having requestted to be called at midnight that he might visit the outposts.

"Pierre," he said, after the man had been posted, you must keep your eyes open. Don't even let a stray horse go out or come in without the pass. Do you understand?"

'Ay, mon colonel, I shall be prompt"

'The dogs are around us.' pursued the officer, 'and you cannot be too careful.—Don't trust men nor brutes without good proof.'

'Never fear,' was Pierre's answer, as he brought his firelock to his shoulder, and moving back a pace.

After this guard moved on to the next post, and Pierre Sancoin was left alone Pierre's post was one of the most important in the camp; or rather around it, and he had been placed there for that reason. The ground over which he had to walk was a long knoll, bounded at one end by huge rock, and at the other sloping away into a narrow ravine in which was a copse of willows. Beyond this copse the ground was low and boggy, so that a man could not pass it. The rock was to the westward, and Pierre's walk to the outer side.

The night was quite dark, huge masses of clouds boating overhead, and shutting out the stars, and a sort of fog seemed to be raising also from the marsh.—The wind moaned through the copse in the ravine, and the air was damp and chilly; with a slow, steady tread the soldier paced his ground, ever and anon stopping to listen, as the willows in the ravine rattled their leaves, or some night-bird flew out with its quick flapping.

An hour passed away, he had seen nothing to excite his suspicion. He had stopped for a moment close by the rock, when he was startled by a quick, wild screech from the woods; and in a few moments more a large bird flew over his head.

"Parbleu!" he uttered, after the night-bird had flown over, "could mortal man have stopped that fellow from passing?"

He satisfied himself that he had done nothing in suffering the bird to pass.—He had walked the length of his way two or three times, and was turning by the rock, when he was sure he saw a dark object just crossing the like towards the camp.

"Hold!" he cried, bringing his musket quick to his shoulder. 'Hold, or I fire!"

And with his piece at aim, he advanced towards the spot where the object had stopped; but as he came within a few yards of it, it started again towards the camp.

"Diable!" cried Pierre, "move any further and I fire. What Pardieu! Le Prince. Ho, ho, why Prince,'

The animal turned and made a motion as though he would leap upon the sentinel's bosom, but he motioned him off.

'Bravo, Prince!' Pierre cried, reaching forth his hand and patting the head of the shaggy beast, which had now sat upon his haunches. Pierre recognized the intruder now as a great dog, of the breed of St. Bernard, which had been owned in the regiment for over a year and which had been missed for about a week. He had disappeared one night from the pickets, and all search for him had been unavailing.

'Parbleu, men grand Prince!' Pierre uttered as though the dog could understand every word, the men will be happy to see you." Where have you been for so long."

The dog made no answer to this, save a low whine and a familiar nodding of the head.

'Now, mon ami, you must jest keep your sittiing there till the guard comes, and then we will go to the camp together. Mind that, will you?"

And with these words, uttered with solemn emphasis and due meaning, Pierre started on his bout again. He had got half-way to the rock, when the idea of looking around struck him, and he did so. Le Prince was moving towards the camp again.

'Ha! Prince, that won't do. Stop, stop or I'll shoot! Diable, the Colonel was possitive in his orders. I was to let nothing pass my post without the countersign. A dog is something; you can't go, Prince, so now lie down. Down! down! I say!'

With this the dog lay flat down upon his belly and stretched out his fore paws Pierre patted him upon the head again, and having duly urged upon him the necessity of remaining where he was, he resumed his march once more.

During the next fifteen minutes, the animal lay perfectly quiet, and ever and anon the sentinel would speak to him by way of being sociable. But at length the dog made another attempt to go to the camp. Pierre had nearly reached the rock when he heard the movement and on turning he could just see his uneasy companion making off.

'Diable!' the honest fellow uttered; 'I must obey orders. The Colonel's word was plain. Here! Parbleu! Come here Here Prince! Mon Dieu! you must die if you don't.

With a few quick bounds the soldier get near enough to the dog to fire, and as the latter stopped, he stopped.

'Mon cher ami, you must stay with me! Here! Come back! I must shoot if you don't. Par bleu! what a thing to start a whole camp for, to shoot a dog.'

But by coaxing and threatening, the sentinel got the dog back to his post, and there he made him lie down once more. And thus matters rested till the tramp of the coming guards was heard.

'Ah, now, Prince he'll be relieved,' the soldier said, stopping near the dog. 'You shall go and see your old friends.'

The tramp of the coming guards drew near, and Pierre was preparing to hail them, when the dog took a new start and in a new direction, this time starting towards the copse.

'Here, here, Prince! Parbleu, don't you run off again.'

But the dog took no other notice of the call than to quicken his speed.

'Back! back! here.'

'Grand Dieu!' This last exclamation was forced from Pierre's lips by seeing the dog leap to his hind legs and run thus! In an instant the truth burst upon him. Quick as thought he clapped his gun to his shoulder and took aim. He could just distinguish the dim outlines now, and then he fired. There was a sharp cry, and Pierre had to turn for the guards were approaching.

'Qui es la?' Who is there?" he cried.

'Relief Guard,' was the answer.

And having obtained the countersign, he informed the officer of what had happened.

'A dog?' cried the officer. 'Prince did you say?'

'He looked like Prince, but, Diable, you should have seen him run off on his hind legs!'

'Eh? hind legs?'

'Yes.'

'Then come; show us where he was.'

With this the officer of the mounted guard pulled his lantern from his breast and having removed the shade he started on. Pierre led the way to the copse, and there the dog was found in the last struggles of death.

The officer stooped down and turned him over.

'Grand Dieu! he cried 'what legs for a dog, eh!'

And no wonder he said so. The hind legs of the dog were booted and had every appearance of the pedal extremities of the genus man. But all doubts were removed very quickly, for as the officer turned the body again, a deep groan came up, and the words, 'God take me!' in the Prussian tongue, followed

'Diable! here's an adventure!' uttered the officer, and he made Pierre hold the lantern while he ripped open enough of the dog's skin to find the face. But they concluded not to stop there to investigate so they formed a litter by crossing their muskets and, having lifted the strange animal upon it, they proceeded on their way to camp, they found half the soldiers up, waiting to find out why the gun was fired.

Lights were brought, and the body placed upon the ground. The dog's skin was removed and within was found a Prussian trimmer. He was small, though apparently some twenty years of age; but he was dead—Pierre's ball having touched his heart, or somewhere very near it. His pockets were over hauled, and in one of them was found a cipher, but no one of them could make anything out of it.—The colonel took it, and directed that the body be placed out of sight, for burial on the morrow.

But this was not the end. About 4 o'clock, just before daylight, another gun was fired on the same post where Pierre had been; and this time a man was shot who was trying to make his escape from the camp. He was shot through the leg. When the body was brought into camp, it was found to be that of a Bavarian trooper who had been suspected of treachery, though no proof had ever been found against him. On his person was found the key to the cipher which had been taken from the person of the drummer; and now the colonel had them both, he could translate the mystic scroll. It proved to be a direction to the Bavarian to lay his plans for keeping as near Napolean's person as possible, after he should enter Berlin, and then wait for further orders.

The mystery was explained. The Bavarian had conrived to call a great dog away from the regiment, and deliver him up to to the enemy, and his skin was to be made the cover for a spy to enter the camp. And the spy would have got in, too, but for the sportive order of the Colonels oud the wilfully faithful obedience of Pierre Sancoin.

On the next day Pierre was promoted to the rank of a sergeant, and the Emperor said to him, as he bestowed the boon: "If you only make as faithful an officer as you have proved yourself faithful as a sentinel, I ask no more."
