AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

ESTATES OF PRINCE SCHWARZENBERG.

The Model Austrian Farmer—His Splendid Properties and Style of Management—Forests and Fisheries—Game, &c.

Prince John Adolphus Schwarzenberg, of Austria, has figured conspicuously in all the letters from the Vienna exposition treating of agriculture. The Prince is the descendant of a long line of illustrious warriors, but has chosen to confine his victories and his laurels to peace rather than war. His estates are very numerous, and all of them have been converted into practical use under the most judicious system of agricultural administration. He has castles and lands in Bavaria. In Syria, in Upper and Lower Austria, in Hungary and in Bohemia, his possessions may be found—farms, lands, breweries, flour mills, brandy distilleries, forests, iron mines, iron founderies, bakeries, fisheries, forges—on his lands alone, dependent in some measure upon him, a population of over two hundred and fifty thousand souls. In a rough calculation these estates are seventy or eighty miles in extent, and may be divided into a hundred separate farms. He is a contestant for many prizes at the Vienna exhibition, and of course has entered as a contestant for the prize for a model farm. The jurymen to examine and decide upon the farms, accompanied by a number of journalists, visited the other day his estate in Bohemia. A correspondent of the New York Herald, who accompanied the expedition, says:

EXTENT OF THE SCHWARZENBERG ESTATE.

A better idea of the vast extent of the Schwarzenberg estate cannot be imparted perhaps than by giving some facts gathered during the day's excursion. The area of the estate is nearly seventy-five thousand acres, one-half of which is devoted to forest culture, 20,000 acres to agriculture, and 14,000 to fisheries, &c. Altogether there are 532 buildings, of which there are twenty-three breweries, four sugar refineries, one oil manufactory, one steam saw-mill, one steam bakery, four water mills, twenty-three board saw mills, forty-six brick and lime kilns, three furnaces, four forges, one Bessemer furnace, and a host of farms, cottages for laborers, fishermen, foresters, and so on. Besides these there are a number of humanitarian institutions spread over the estate. An asylum for the aged and infirm, with accommodations for twenty persons, ten men and ten women; a hospital, with fourteen beds, in which 107 persons received treatment last year; a girl's school, under the superintendence of nine Sisters of Mercy, where some three hundred children annually receive instruction. All of these are supported by the princely house from its revenues. There are in all some eighteen schools on the estate supported by the respective communities, while the girls' school is a favorite institution of the family.

HOW THE ESTATE IS MANAGED.

The various offices connected with the castle and estate are extensive enough for a Thurigian principality. There is, for instance, the bureau of the domains, with its ministry for home and foreign affairs; the rent bureau, to which is also attached the ministry of ecclesiastical and commercial affairs; the fishery bureau, with a minister of naval affairs and an assistant, whose jurisdiction extends over the turf beds; a forest bureau, with a master of the woods, and adjuncts of the saw mills and foresters; a general bureau, with a minister whose duty it is to look after the grain stock, like Joseph of old in Egypt, as well as over the potteries and the lime kilns; an engineer's bureau and an architect's bureau; a brewery bureau, with a minister, a secretary, and two burly brewers; a steam mill bureau, a bureau of accounts and a bureau of archives. The prince possesses the patron's right over fourteen parishes to appoint priests in sixteen churches and two chapels. The right is nevertheless a very costly one, since the estate has to provide several thousand florins yearly towards their support.

THE MODEL FARM.

The Wittingan farm estate is one of the best in Austria. It embraces all branches of agriculture — cattle breeding, sheep breeding, &c. The Prince farms eleven places, five of which belong to the Wittingan, three to the Lomnitz, and three to the Hammer sections, containing 6,000 acres of cultivable ground, divided as follows: Grain 50.3, meadow 38.3, pasturage 8.4, nurseries 2.3, hop gardens 0.4, orchard 0.1. On the 1st of May last the number of animals on the immediate farms was 1,000 cattle, 5,271 sheep, 16 horses, 11 foals, besides 17 spans of horses used for home purposes. On the eleven farms are employed eleven superintendents, ten chief threshers, nine fodder masters, two guardians of the meadows, in all thirty-two persons, and a host of laborers, men and women. The wages of labor average from one to two dollars a week in our American money.

THE FOREST CULTURE.

The forest culture so much needed to be utilized in America, is thus discribed by the correspondent:

The entire forest area is divided into six classes, according to the age of the trees —from 1 to 20, from 21 to 40, from 41 to 60, from 61 to 80, from 81 to 100, and about 100—120 being about the extent of age permitted to the monarchs of the wood. Wandering through the estate one comes upon the immense areas, first of felled trees, then of sproutlings, then of youths, then of matured and finally of aged trees, with towering trunks and spreading foliage, and of which the German poet sings:

"Who, beautiful tree, has built thee up so high?"

THE FISHERIES.

The fisheries, resembling in their workings our own, are also discribed, except that they are all under one management. The correspondent says:

"The Wittengan fishery bureau superintends no less than fifteen thousand acres of lake and ponds, producing annually 3,500 hundred weight of carp, 200 hundred weight of pike and schill, or 224 tons of nobler sort of fish; a quantity, however, which does not supply the demand of Vienna."

THE GAME.

Of the game he says:

"In the year 1871 9,016 head of game were shot, of which 4,843 belonged to what is designated as useful, or palatable game. Among the latter were 19 stags, 38 deer, 13 fawns, 114 roebucks, 36 roe, 18 kids, 3,132 hares, 35 wood grouse, 4 heath cocks, 3 hazel hens, 1,812 partridges, 414 wild ducks, 186 gray ducks, 18 wood snipes, besides 2 fish otters, 1 badger, 9 martens, 17 marders, 40 weasels, 8 eagles, 50 kites, 38 hawks, 48 vultures, and nearly four thousand of other classes."

All these vast estates receive the personal supervision of the Prince, who is seventy-four years of age, assisted by his heir, who has from his youth been thoroughly educated into the art of agriculture rather than war.

Honey, Money, and Bees in the Hive.

KEEPING BEES.—The time is not far distant when every farmer, and almost every suburban resident of our large towns and cities, will have their swarms of bees as much as they have now their hens.

There is at present a popular prejudice against the honey bee, either as a very uncertain possession, or one of doubtful comfort and easy management. But this prejudice is founded wholly on the ignorance and mismanagement of a former generation. We shared this feeling in full measure till induced by a friend, a few years ago, to accept a swarm of bees and try our hand at their management. But a short time was sufficient to disarm us of all prejudice against the honey bee, and we was not long in becoming decidedly attached to them. Our experience was sufficient to learn that the management is easy, and even more so than of poultry; and by the introduction of movable-comb hives, the management is rendered still more easy, and their income and profit greatly increased.

We therefore advise every person living in the country, especially those of small means, to procure a hive of bees and get information on their best management from the many sources now open.

One swarm will soon increase to several, and in a few years to scores. Their pasture costs nothing, and yet their productions command a high price, and the price of a swarm of bees will continually advance as a knowledge of their value increases.—Bee Journal.

What is said of Butter.

When a wholesale dealer is questioned as to the proportion of really fine butter he receives in his consignments, he replies five per cent. A larger proportion than this comes to market as grease. The grocer will tell you that of all your stock good butter is the most difficult to procure, and costs him most time and trouble to select. We know there is no good reason why this should be so. Here and there scattered widely apart throughout the country we know farmers who make excellent butter, which would be classed first quality in the market and next door to those neighbors who make trash unfit for food. On the counters of country stores may any day be seen rolls of butter most widely different in color, flavor and texture. One farmer is careful and cleanly, and his wife keeps her dairy sweet and her pales and pans perfectly pure; another keeps a foul stable, milks in an uncleanly fashion, has musty feed and foul water for his cows, while his wife is equaly careless in her dairy. How can the butter in these two cases be other than widely diffent in quality and value?

A Butchers' Match.

The most extraordinary match of the season was witnessed in Hoboken, N. J., between O'Keefe and Pattrick Fitzgerald. The contestants were butchers, and their relative merits for skill and expedition were to be decided by a sheep killing match. At 3:14 P. M. the words one, two, three, were given, Fitzgerald and O'Keefe each seized a sheep, whose throat has already been cut by the attendants, and began their manipulations. First there was some work on the floor, which the butchers call legging, because the cutting of the skin on the legs is the principal feature. The floor work completed, the sheep's hind legs are tied together, and it is hung on a convenient hook.

Fitzgerald hung up his fiftieth sheep in two hours and twenty-seven minutes, making an average of two minutes and forty seconds for each sheep. His opponent was eleven minutes behind, having cut himself badly twice.

Dog Shows.

We should advocate a dog show in each State if thereby could be got together all the dogs, good, bad, and indifferent, that go to make up the dogdom. We should advocate this for the benefit of agriculture; for we fancy that if many farmers who now keep worthless, or worse than worthless curs, were to see and know what a really good and valuable dog is, they would consent to dispatch their curs and save their neighbors sheep. The dog shows in England and France have, in some measure, resulted in weeding out the poorer and more useless classes of dogs; and herein lies their utility, beside proving attractive resorts for the populace.—Whether our people would ride long distances to see a State dog show or not, we might try the experiment as a reformatory movement. If agriculturists must keep dogs, they should keep those that are most docile, sagacious, and useful.

WATER CURE FOR FOUNDER.—A correspondent of the New York Tribune cured a bad case of founder as follows:—In the first place, I physiced him; then I took a tight, strong box, got his feet into it, and poured boiling hot water into it, as high as the hair on his feet, and in ten or fifteen minutes he was able to stand on his forelegs without the assistance of the tackle. I kept up this treatment for thirty-six hours, when he was able to go about and help himself. In a few days I had his shoes put on, and in less than a fortnight more he was able to work as well as ever.

DYSPEPSIA IS A HYDRA-HEADED MONSTER—from which nearly all "the ills the human flesh is heir to" originate.—The Peruvian Syrup, a protected solution of the protoxide of Iron, is a long-tried and well-established remedy for this distressing complaint; it has cured thousands when other remedies have failed.
