The Land of Puzzledom

No. 931.—Vehicle Charade.

Two vehicles in one, by an article united,
Making a conveyance still used in lands benighted.
That which joins these two is in each one contained;
The whole has therefore three, as need not be explained.
My first is what Americans have chosen as the word
To signify what Englishmen prefer to call my third.
Each came later than the whole, for they were not invented
When mankind with the whole was forced to be contented.
My second is the first thing that's used in preparation,
In giving little learners an English education.

No. 932.—Numerical Enigma.

I am composed of ten letters and mean comrades.
My 4-8-7-10-2-6 is a deadly substance.
My 1-8-3-7-1 means laughable.
My 9-5-4 means doze.

No. 933.—Hidden Name Puzzle.

The name of an English philosopher and statesman whose name has figured prominently in a certain spirited controversy of late years is hidden in the following five sentences. If the right one syllable words are chosen (one word from each sentence only) and written one below another their initial letters will spell the hidden name: (1) A busy bee makes plenty of honey. (2) To pursue the arts one must have plenty of money. (3) When the cat is away the mice behave badly. (4) Learn to grow old gracefully. (5) Many an old nag is worth more than a race horse.

No. 934.—Concealed Square Words.

I.

The auto lamps were all alight.
It raced downhill with all its might,

Then stopped with sudden bound and jerk.
It once more moved—refused to work.

Sam uses every tool he owns,
And o'er his ill success he groans.

Just try your Frisco sinews, Bart.
See if your strength can make us start.

I do believe nerves have their way
In motors as in mortals. Stay!

Our wits deserted us, indeed,
'Tis gasoline alone we need.

II.

Come in. This is the finest spot
To get your cocoa steaming hot.

Get out your broiler, landlord, say
What is the best you have today.

The very thing, a liver fine
And bacon sweet on which to dine.

You'll think, no matter what you name,
It's even better than its fame.

He has a knack that renders e'en
The simplest dishes fit for queen.
—Youth's Companion.

No. 935.—Missing Word Puzzle.

Here is a clever missing word puzzle wherein you are asked to place some word in the upper blank space and the same word in the lower space, so that both sentences read properly.

No. 936.—Hidden Fishes.

Four fishes in each sentence.

1. Last night said the bishop, "I keenly enjoy bathing, and I do not wish to disturb others in the same pleasure, but many boys in this parish err in going into the water when they are overheated. Now, I would say, swim in no water when you are warm."

2. Tell Job as soon as I saw the Hebrew psalm on the table I gave Elder Brown a copy, and he has had it translated.

3. Some boys terrified a Saco damsel who had been suffering from chronic lameness by dressing up outlandishly.

4. Do not risk a ten cent piece in lotteries, do not spend a cent foolishly, yet do not hold your money with too tight a grasp. Rather be charitable, and if you would prosper cheer the poor with needful articles.

The Happy Place.

A great elm towers above the bank,
And the water is pooled below,
And tall marsh grass grows coarse and rank
Where farmer laddies go
On a summer day when the sky is glazed
And meadows waver with heat,
And burning dust in the road is raised
By the pad of youngsters' feet.
And dust and heat are charmed away
By the water's magic cry,
And the elm's gray shadow drips with spray
That the swimmers dash on high.
