The afternoon of Saturday, March 18th, will be especially for teachers and will be devoted to a discussion of how to teach home economies in the rural schools.

A copy of the programe containing subjects and names of lectures may be had by addressing a requst to the College.

Ridgely Melvin Badly Injured.

The Sunday Sun contained the following:

Thrown from his horse while returning from a run with the Anne Arundel Hunt Club Saturday morning Ridgely P. Melvin, City Counselor of Annapolis and counsel to the Anne Arundel County Commissioners is a patient at the Emergency Hospital, suffering from a fractured skull.

It was at first feared that the injury had caused concussion of the brain, but after a thorough examination by Dr. St. Clair Spruill, of Baltimore, who was called in consultation, it was found that the fracture did not extend to the inner wall of the skull.

The accident occurred about 10 o'clock on the farm of Charles Pettebone. Because he was unconscious for several hours and his recollection was very vague, the exact circumstances of the accident have not been learned. It is supposed that Melvin was thrown as his horse attempted to vault a fence, as when the other members of the hunting party came up with him about half an hour later Melvin was groping about trying to hold to a fencepost. He immediately lapsed into unconsciousness and it was late in the afternoon before he regained his senses.

At first grave apprehension was felt for the young attorney, but it is stated that he will reeover.

Mr. Melvin is a nephew of Editor Howard Melvin, of this place, and a son of Mr. George T. Melvin, formerly of Denton.

How Colds Cause Kidney Disease

Redden, Denton Md.

Caroline Debating Contest.

Arrangements have been made for debates among Caroline's five high schools that should prove helpful to the students of these schools and stimulating to the communities. Heretofore there have been debates between two schools but the scheme now is to have the work among them all

The arrangement is under control of a member of the faculty from each of the five schools and Superintendent Noble.

The schools will all debate twice—the championship will be awarded to the school receiving the greatest number of points.

A public spirited citizen of Caroline has offered a silver wreath as a trophy to the school that wins this to be hung in the school the following year.

The first debate in the series will be between Ridgely and Greensboro at Greensboro, on Friday evening next, subject Resolved, "That the parcels post system should be established." Ridgely has the affirmative side, Greensboro the negative.

Every Friday evening for five weeks thereafter, there will be a debate between two of the schools. Denton's turn will come about the last of March.

The committee have tried to select live questions for subjects—questions that will be instructive for the students and interesting to those who hear them discussed.

In addition to the debates there will be held at Denton about May 1st, a declamation-recitation contest in which a boy and a girl from each high school will participate. To the winner a medal will be given.

All of this work is worth while for the students of our schools. We congratulate our school officials on making this literary work county wide.

BURRSVILLE

Mr. Leland Russell, of Wilmington, and Mr. and Mrs. Adam Holsinger, of Ridgely, have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Russell.

Mrs. Bertha Trice and Miss Helen Barker, of Harrington, and Mr. Melvin, of East New Market, spent Sunday with Miss Edith Simpson.

Miss Florrie E. Dill entertained Miss Ethel Cahall and brother Arthur, of Mt. Olive, on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Downham and daughter, Mary, of Wyoming, are visiting Mrs. Downham's mother, Mrs. Mary J. Cahall.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Raughley, of near Ridgely, and Mr. Harry Raughley, of Harrington, spent Sunday with Mr. J. B. Raughley and family.

The "Child's Welfare" movement has challenged the attention of thoughtful people everywhere. Mothers are natural supporters, and will find in Foley's Honey and Tar Compound a most valuable aid. Coughs and colds that unchecked lead to croup, bronchitis and pneumonia yield quickly to the healing and soothing qualities of Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. Sold by C. H. Redden, Denton Md.

Farmers Institute.

Dr. Richard S. Hill, Director of Farmers' Institute, opened the session for Denton in the Court House on Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock with a large attendance including the school children from the high school building. Dr. Hill opened the meeting with a few remarks on the institute work and then introduced Mr. Collier of the Talbot experimental farm who gave a most instructive and interesting talk on corn growing. He laid great stress upon the selection of seed and the testing box which did away he said with corn thinning, as only two or three grains were put in each hill. He advised selecting seed corn in the fall before the corn is cut and drying it and keeping it dry by hanging up the ears. He said corn from the same crib that sprouted 90 per cent of the grains tested before January of this year, failed to sprout more than 10 per cent since the severe cold weather of that month, therefore farmers who did not test their seed corn run a great risk of having a poor stand after planting next spring.

Mr. Collier was followed by Mr. Oswald of the Western Shore who told how they raised tomatoes both for early market and for the canneries. He advised saving seed from the best tomatoes raised and the planting of double rows three and one half feet by four and one half or 5 feet, apart, so that the vines could be trained unto the double rows.

In the afternoon Mr. Colliar spoke on commercial fertilizers and crimson clover, comparing the analysis of fertilizers with a crop of grass plowed under. He was followed by Mr. Oswell in a talk on poultry, who showed his improved houses and the way of watering and feeding, and although he claimed that poultry was only a side issue on his farm, he gave some very practical and interesting suggestions.

The director and speakers went from Denton to Ridgely where a meetings was held yesterday and again today.

Everyone seemed well pleased with the meeting and the attendance was unusually good.

HOMEBODY DWELLER IN S

He Found That He Had How to Skate—And Something Else Too.

"I wouldn't have thought," said a former flat dweller, "that one could ever forget how to skate, but I have discovered that he can.

"Last spring, after twenty years in a city flat, we moved to a house in the suburb near which there is a pond that gives good skating in winter. When I was a boy I used to be good on skates and the other day I went out to this pond. I hadn't skated for more than twenty years, but I had no idea but that I could put on a pair of skates and just glide right off with the rest of them. Do you know what actually happened?

"I got a pair of skates and stood up on them, but that was about all. I could stand up, but not much more, and surely I was surprised. I made a few efforts, and I did get a little distance, but only by great effort, and my feet were apt to spread out and my ankles to turn and I was all the time in danger of falling down. So I was very glad to get those skates off and to acknowledge that I had forgotten how to skate. But that was nothing to another thing I had forgotten, namely, the use of the snow shovel.

"There was a time when I could shovel snow with the best of them; but during those twenty years up in the flat I had never touched a shovel; the janitor attended to all that. But here in our own suburban home when snow fell the shovelling was up to me; the walk from the front door to the sidewalk, the stretch of sidewalk itself, and the walk around to the kitchen door.

"And when I tackled this job for the first time, well, I was surprised, indeed, to find how much I'd forgotten about snow shovelling.

"But there was nobody but me to do it, and it had to be done. I may never again learn to skate, but I've had to learn anew how to shovel snow."

CHURCHMAN PARTY TO FRAUD

At Least, Ecclesiastic Thought So When Told Emerald Was Only an Imitation.

Bishop Johnson of South Dakota tells this story of himself:

"I was dining one night beside a man of whom I had never heard before. I soon discovered that he was quick witted and later I was also to discover that he was a jewelry expert. I was wearing an emerald ring which I prize very highly for its history as well as for its beauty.

"'Will you let me see your ring?' he asked.

"I gladly passed the trinket to him; he examined it critically, and then returned it, saying:

"'It is the best imitation emerald I ever saw.'

"I was startled. I told him that it was genuine and had been used in England by churchmen for 200 years, and that it had always been considered a flawless gem.

"'Nevertheless,' he replied, 'it is an imitation emerald.'

"Some time later I met an expert in gems in New York, showed him the ring and asked his opinion of it. The man looked at it and told me that it was an imitation.

"'I have reproached myself for having told you,' he remarked.

"'I'm glad you did tell me,' I replied. 'Else I might have transmitted a lie to posterity.'

"'You surely would have been in good company in doing that,' said he, and the incident was at an end."—The World Today.

Decline of Repentance.

Repentance—once so universally practiced at this season of the year, as well as on birthdays, and sometimes on Su ys—is rapidly becoming one of the obsolete virtues. Even novelists seem to have grown tired of the "wabbling" heroine, the lady who plunged into exotic sins one day and betook herself (metaphorically) to a nunnery the next, only to join the army of backsliders with greater zest than ever as soon as her fit of penitence was over. Despite copybook maxims warning the unwary of the futility of indulging in lamentation over spilt milk, repentance has flourished exceedingly, and women especially have hitherto always manifested a strong bias in that direction.

Repentance needs leisure, and that may be why it is gradually going out of fashion. People have no time to look backwards, and, moreover, they are now realizing the futility of doing so. Like Omar Khayyam, they understand that no one can rub out what the moving Finger has written, and that tears are powerless to undo what has once been done.—Exchange.

Much-Named Isle.

The Parisians, who are extremely fond of changing place names within their jurisdiction, have never equaled the record established in this respect in the case of the Island of Reunion, which has changed its name four times in a little over half a century and with little or no reason for doing so.

In 1793 it was Bourbon, as it had been for a century and a half; but the convention then changed it to Reunion.

Under the empire it became Isle Bonaparte, at the restoration it reverted to Bourbon, and, finally, in 1848, it became Reunion once more and so far has retained that name.
