MRS. JOY SPEAKS OUT! By A. B. CHAPIN

Sallie's Temptations

BOB ADVISES SALLIE TO GO TO WORK

I suffered a mental crucifixion through the next few weeks. Life ahead meant nothing but a series of dark and heavy-laden days, a time to be gotten though somehow, so that at night, I would feel that another twenty-four hours had gone. The experience cured me of being uncharitable. No girl will ever endure the misery and heartache that I suffered by any gossiping words of mine.

I seemed to grope on and on through terrifying woods. Each way I tried to turn black barriers barred my retreat. I had lost the keen joy of living and as far as any enthusiasm or ambition went, I was without emotion of any sort.

The only three friends who stood by were Ellie, Marjorie and Bob. Father thought I was ill and suggested rest but it was impossible for me to remain in bed.

One day when things were too puzzling and I could find no solution for the problems that crowded my brain, I went to have dinner with Marjorie and Bob.

"I'm going on up to bed after dinner," Marjorie announced, "Bob wants to talk to you, Sallie. Do whatever he suggests because he always peps me up when I am out of sorts. I tell you I've lived on his optimism lo these many years."

Bob was just the person I needed in all the world. We sat in the dim stillness of the open porch, there followed a half hour that gave me a new viewpoint.

"Go to work, Sallie," he said. "It will give you back, first, your courage, then enthusiasm and a new faith in your fellowmen."

"Oh, Bob!" I sobbed.

"I know it sounds drab and uninteresting, but it's exactly what you need."

"But if it hadn't been for that awful mistake, I could have gone on and on being light-hearted and happy and I would have had the love of Curtiss Wright."

"Never mind, Kiddie, he'll learn that mistakes are just a line or two in the book of life. Yours had to come to you, Sallie, sooner or later, but remember that fate doesn't work with poor material. You're out of the ordinary and you've been singled out. There are lots of other girls who have done much worse and have escaped. But it's because you have big soul possibilities that these hard experiences have fallen to your lot. The mistakes you've made are the things that go into the melting pot in which the dross is seared away and the real qualities that are substantial and unbreakable are crystalized into the thing we call character or soul."

"Bob, whiy should I go to work? I don't know how to do anything. I haven't been trained."

"Never mind, we'll find something. It's necessary, Sallie, dear, for only by doing something for other people will you chisel out the sweetness and charity that are a part of your inner self. Marriage to the right man would have done it," he continued, "and children. You need responsibility to give your spiritual faculties strength."

I wept copiously. Bob let me alone, knowing it was an outlet for my burdened mind.

"But Bob, Curtiss will never understand."

"Yes he will, Sallie, in time. With Curtiss it's just a question of youth and psychology. As I told you once before, every man feels the same way about the woman he loves and the more sincere he is, the more intensely he's going to feel that way. He can't accept the equal standard basis, no matter how hard he tries. In his overwhelming love for you, Curtiss has forgotten that you are just one of God's human beings, created as he, himself, whose impulses and emotions are fundamentally the same."

"If he knew you as we do, he would realize than any mistakes that you could have made would not necessarily mean that your soul was stained."

"Yes, I see what you mean, Bob, but I feel so different about him that it's hard to understand. If he were in prison with blood on his hands or if he had taken some woman into his life for a week or even a month, that would make no difference in my belief in him. I'd still know he was fine. I'd consider his mistakes were only pitfalls in the road over which he had been led and behind it all, I'd know the Curtiss whom I loved was all right and that he was eternally mine. I might be unhappy and I might suffer but I would suffer with him, not apart. I can't conceive of any body putting the ONE person they loved out of their lives for ANYTHING."

"God! you've grown!" Bob exclaimed, already you talk like a woman instead of a girl.'

"No, its just that you're helping me to see mentally. Brushing away the clouds."

Silence.

The tip of Bob's cigarette pierced the still summer's gloom.

WOMAN IS KILLED BY AUTO

Middletown, Del., July 12—Stepping out of the path of one automobile directly in front of another, Mr. A Blanchfield, 50, was so badly injured that she died before a physician could be summoned.

Hhe accident, which happened close to midnight, was at one of the town's busiest street corners, and as the driver of the car did not stop to ascertain how badly he had injured the woman, he escaped during the excitement.

WEEKLY INDUSTRIAL REVIEW

"A good local paper makes a good local community," says the Spokane Spakesman Review. "The well-edited paper is a distinctive advantage to its community and serves a need that will always exist. It prints the current news of the community and, with a capable editor, it becomes a real factor in the upbuilding of the community. It can and does accomplish much for the common weal. It reflects the character of the community itself. It aids materially in the direction and assistance of all community developments, both industrial and educational. It could not survive one year if no need existed or it fails to fill the wants."
