WOMAN'S WORLD

Color Tricks, Storage Space Improves Small Bathrooms

By Ertta Haley

MANY WOMEN who are very happy with the way in which their homes are constructed and decorated frequently despair of their bathrooms. "Too small," they say. "Not enough room for anything," others add.

Even smaller bathrooms have possibilities for definite decoration, and some of the smallest can be transformed so they offer almost amazing storage possibilities. Frequently you'll find that once storage room has been added to the bathroom, it can be more attractive than before.

Good use of space is not only a practical idea, but it can be beautiful because of its use. Imagine being able to display your cosmetics in the bathroom, in their attractive containers. You'll appreciate their beauty, as well as your convenience to them.

Consider how useful and lovely it would be if you could display your lovely thick towels in all their luscious colors, on open shelves in the bathroom.

Wouldn't you like a built-in vanity in your bathroom, if even a small one? With a lovely waterproof skirt, it can add decor to the room as well as interest.

Have you seen the lovely glass, as well as the jewel-toned plastic gadgets which can be placed in bathrooms for convenience in hanging daily washed items such as hose and gloves? You can appreciate their beauty as well as enjoy their practicality.

Does your bathroom have a medicine chest? If not, you are missing one of the greatest conveniences. With small children, you can store away all poisons and dangerous drugs in this, and lock them. A glass on the door will give you the essential feature of every bathroom, a mirror.

Use Empty Walls For Storage

No matter how small the bathroom, there's usually wall space left after the major features are installed. In modern building this space is not simply left there; it's used to the fullest limit.

At the entrance to the bathroom, which is frequently a small hallway type of construction, or on one of the walls adjoining the bath tub or bowl, you may have several feet of space extending from floor to ceiling.

For a space of this type have three or four recessed shelves of the open type constructed. These can be used for towels, bath mats and other such accessories.

You'll still have two or three feet of space from the floor to the place where the shelves begin. Use these for two or three drawers. These may contain additional soap supplies, bathing aids such as brushes, bathroom cleaners, or extra supplies of cosmetics and tooth paste or shaving supplies.

Space above the wash basin or bowl is ideal for a medicine cabinet with a mirror door. It's convenient, right at this place, and this is a good place for the mirror.

Wall space elsewhere in the bathroom, especially any that's on the upper half of the wall can be used for cabinets, medicine or storage. Shadow boxes which are recessed into the walls are also decorative as well as good for storing towels, wash cloths, mats and shower curtains.

Vanity In Bathroom Offers Convenience

Having a vanity or a dressing table in the bathroom offers great convenience in many respects. If your wash basin or bowl does not have enough of a ledge on which to set bottles of cosmetics, combs, brushes and pins, you can imagine the great joy of the vanity.

In addition to this, having the vanity, even a small one in the bathroom, frees the bedroom from much clutter and transfers it to a room where any spilled powder or lotion is much easier to clean.

Vanities in the bathroom easily take the place of the dressing room. This might offer further incentive to investigate the possibilities of the project, especially if it can be managed, and you do not have room for a "powder" or dressing room.

There are several ways in which the bath can be modernized to take care of the project. If your bath tub does not extend all the way from one side of the room to the other, or take up a whole wall, in other words, there might be a small space at the end of the tub where it could be constructed. Clay tiling will provide an excellent top while a skirt will complete the vanity. Place a mirror on the wall above the top. This may have light fixtures on either side if light is essential.

Vanities can be built around the basin simply by extending the top with tiling, enough to make a table. If you have the room, bring out tiling and set on a table top which has a sunken box with a lid for tissues and cosmetics. In this case when the top lid is opened, the mirror is on the inside of the box and will stand straight up.

Provide Bathroom With Drying Facilities

Grandmother always had a convenient basement for her laundry, but in modern homes we like more convenience. Let's face the fact that today's bathroom has to be a miniature laundry for daily sudsings required for hose, gloves and underwear.

Most of these are quick-drying and hardly worth the trouble to bring to the basement if you have one, especially when they can be washed so readily in the bathroom. Keep them neatly off the towel racks, however, if you want to avoid family feuds.

One excellent solution to the drying problem is a rack constructed at the end of the bath tub, especially in the case of the tub that does not extend all the way to the wall. One side of the rack can rest on the floor, the other against the ceiling. Six or more horizontal bars give wonderful drying space for daily laundry as well as towel drying.

Then, too, there are other drying aids which may be attached to the back of the door or on wall space in the bath. They vary all the way from folding racks or shells or hooks for such small items as socks, hose and hankies.

Color Modernizes Old Bathrooms

There's nothing quite like the current luscious colors for adding newness and pep to the out-dated bathroom. Specially finished wallpapers can be used in many of them, while clay tiling and plastic finishes may be more practical for you.

If part of the bathroom is painted, as frequently happens with the upper half of a tiled bathroom, choose a new color for a good change.

Fixtures may often be modernized at little expense. If the sore spot in your bathroom is the old-fashioned light hanging from the ceiling, you may find it will cost little to install fluorescent type lighting, or at least wall fixtures with a more modern look.

Don't neglect such small fixtures as new rods, soap containers, corner shelves or plastic shelves which offer storage as well as beauty.

When the bathroom is used by several people, make ample provision for the towels they use, both for hands and bath. Towel racks for the youngsters should be placed low enough for them to reach readily, thus discouraging the draping of wet and dirty towels on the side of the tub.

Double Cape Style

In keeping with the interest in doubles for fashion this season, here's a bolero-cape of sheer wool navy layered with white pique over a matching wool dress. The short-sleeved collarless dress fastens with bone buttons and is belted in navy leather. The cape is slit in the back.

KATHLEEN NORRIS

Refuse To Wither on the Stem

"WE ARE THE MOST unmarried family you ever heard of," writes 19 - year - old Harriet Sloper, from a Cleveland suburb. "Mother has been a widow since I was four and my sister Elena 10 years old. We have two half-sisters, teachers and part founders of a girls' school. Mother's sister, unmarried, lives with us. We all talk marriage and beaus and romantic affairs—mostly imaginary—all the time, and we're all unmarried.

"We have a big house and plenty of money; Mother has a car, Elena drives to and fro in her own car to a good job in Cleveland; I have a small car, attend college, but live at home. My half-sisters live at home.

"It is the fashion in this family," this unusually frank letter goes on, "to talk as if men were rather inferior beings, and as if we all had refused several good chances to marry. Lilian and Frances, my half-sisters, like to imply that they wouldn't marry the smartest man who ever lived. But this is not so. They are 34 and 37 now, and it is my honest conviction that neither one has ever had a real offer. Lil talks of some captain she met at the canteen in the last war, and Fran has snapshots of herself taken with several men when she was in college; that's all. Elena is delicate, reserved, bookish, fastidious. They all like her at the office, and the other girls tell her of their affairs, but nobody calls on her.

". . . I envied her . . ."

Wants To Marry

"Now, my problem is," Harriet goes on, "that I want to marry, and marry young, because that seems the safest way. My chum, 20 years old, eloped with a married man last Christmas, and they had an awful time getting his marriage annulled and everybody cried and talked to lawyers and was horribly shocked. I wasn't shocked; I envied her. I'm not unusually pretty, but I have a good figure, swim, play tennis, love hikes and camping—and I'm friendly. I've won prizes dancing, and I was president of the class in my last year high, and voted the best all-around citizen in the whole school.

"So why don't men come to see me? And why doesn't one of them, after we've had an afternoon of tennis, and a hot weather supper with my aspic and my strawberry ice cream, reach over and squeeze my hand when we're sitting out on the steps? What haven't I got? I want a home, I want children and a kitchen and a lawn to rake and a man to meet when the afternoon train comes in. Is that so unreasonable?

"I don't want to dry up and wither on the family stem; I want life!" Harriet's letter finishes. "Mother can't help me, she talks as if marriage was one long trial for a woman. Certainly my sisters and my aunt are no help; they are really a hindrance, watching and interested and all, but asking any man who ventures into our house what his intentions are. There must be men as anxious to find a good mate as I am. I forgot to say that I am studying to be a public librarian, and hope to have a job in about 14 months."

Sit Tight

That's the letter, and in answer I wrote Harriet that I would advise her to sit tight for those 14 months.

I would advise her to give up the job of hunting for a sweetheart in these discouraging circumstances, but devote herself to her work, and to the family.

Then, when she graduates, let her go to the head of the library board and explain that she wants to go away. It will be a very simple matter for her to carry her new credentials to some other city, and the family, though perhaps shocked, cannot find that course anything but natural and understandable. Once away from home Harriet will make new contacts, meet all sorts of new people, spread her wings. Before she knows it she will be taking an acceptable man home for the family's approval.

That is, if nothing happens in the meantime.

But something romantic is extremely likely to happen in the meantime. Just her plan to go away will make her more interesting, and her enthusiasm over the complete change, with all it involves in clothes and luggage and books to read and a new fountain pen, will take her attention off the young man to whom she is talking, and make him a little anxious to get it back again.

Over and over again in this life, when we pull ourselves out of a rut and make one plan, another unexpected plan shoots across it.

The wife who feels she never will have a child gets all ready to adopt one, and nature immediately sends her hopes of motherhood. The businessman feeling himself unappreciated in the office, reaches about for another job, and just as he secures it the old firm offers him a raise and a promotion. When Harriet graduates with honors and begins to bustle about deciding just what she will take and won't take into the new venture, quite suddenly some young man in her circle will discover her and make her stay.

ONCE OVER

Crooks Clamour For TV Closeups

By H. I. Phillips

FEDERAL BAR ASSOCIATIONS in several states have protested the use of the video Kefauver Committee examinations, contending that it is a disturbing influence cheapening an inquiry and making things unfair for witnesses. The associations hold that telecasting makes a circus of most inquiries and court proceedings, awing and hampering a witness. On the whole we doubt this. America has a camera complex. Her people never seem happier than when having their pictures taken. Even the most notorious crooks pose with ear-to-ear smiles. Prisoners captured for degrading crimes grin for the cameras as if being named Nobel Prize winners. Sheriffs, cops, detectives and court officials join in the happiness mood. And we have seen few principals in televised proceedings who didn't seem to lap it up.

There have been cases of racketeers refusing to come clean until an extra camera was put in. And we heard of a case where a gangster refused to answer on the ground that anything less than a close-up telecast would tend to incriminate, degrade and embarrass him. Now and then you see an outlaw who doesn't want to be recognized, but it is generally some crumb who doesn't think the crime as alleged vile enough to be associated with him.

If present trends are not halted we may see almost any court trial begun with the appearance of a male quartette of cops singing:

We nab the crooks, we bring 'em in,
So courts can let 'em go agin;
We cite the facts, the case is heard;
What do we get? We get transferred!

A ballet would follow after which the chairman of an inquiry or the prosecutor of the court case would introduce the suspect or prisoner with a true-to-form video show routine, "And now, ladies and gentlemen, it is my great pleasure to give you that sensational slot-machine mogul, that truly talented operator of nefarious enterprises."

A trained dog act or Indian club swinger might be introduced next just to sharpen up the show. And it might be well for a master of ceremonies to inform the television audience, "Wearing purple trunks—Judge Twaddingham! In black trunks with white stripes—the District Attorney!"

It seems to us that in a televised courtroom proceeding the judge, prosecutor and accused should sit together, as on a video panel, each being allowed to wave to his relatives at home. And a jackpot should be worked in somehow, The day is near when the video public may tune in on a murder trial or senate inquiry and win an icebox.

We Overlooked One President

Another Missouri Guy Was President For Day

RESEARCH EXPERTS, digging into history, have unearthed evidence which indicates we have overlooked a President. Instead of 33 men holding the highest office in the land, we could, by virtue of a technicality, list 34.

As the "missing" President is also a Missourian, there is a doubt about President Truman's claim to fame as the first chief executive to hail from the "show-me" state.

The gentleman who has thus far been slighted by the historical record is David R. Atchison, senator from Missouri, 1843-55.

The main historical clue to Atchison's Presidency is found in the 1913 edition of the Biographical Congressional Directory. The directory reveals that Atchison was President of the United States for one day.
