DECEMBER STYLES.

Tunic Gowns — Surplice Waists — Colors Most In Favor — Brussels Net — White Liberty Satin Waists — All Black Waists — Separate Skirts — Evening Wraps.

Fashion and finance are at "loggerheads' just now, yet to note the superb toilettes at the opera, the principle stores overflowing with elegant materials of all kinds, it might be supposed that the two were in perfect harmony. The tunic gowns are taking so well, that the overskirt is to be dreaded, one of the greatest nuisances that ever befell womankind. A tunic trimmed with fringe over a long, flowing skirt is just the newest thing, and waists are either surplice style or a pretense of an Eton, often formed of one of the new metal nets, with colored embroidery or filet lace, over a lace yoke.

THE SURPLICE WAIST.

Economy may enter largely into the concoction of a surplice waist. Almost all feminines have odds and ends of lace, fringe or satin, all of which may be used on a single waist. Colored satin, coral-colored, for example, is used in folds between a white lace yoke, and black chiffon, folds with a handsome black fringe as a finish to the bretelles, and the color also appears in the draped girdle. Blue is stylish on black, and it may be safely asserted that coral and Copenhagen blue have distanced all other colors in spite of the growing popularity of black. Some of the most beautiful gowns of the season are of coral color throughout with touches of blue on waist and sleeves.

The above design is by the McCall Co., of New York.

BRUSSELS NET.

One of the daintiest of evening costumes for a young girl, is of white Brussels net and trimmed by folds of blue taffeta, silk (graduated if desired) the waist in "baby" style, puffed sleeves, with sash to match, knotted at the back and fastened to the dress. The ends should be long reaching to the lower edge of the skirt. Ribbon may be substituted for folds, and pink is as attractive as blue. Liberty silk or messaline are also in favor, but net has its own peculiar charm.

WAISTS.

Colored silk waists have almost died out, and Fashion now demands the all-white or all-black waist, with the exception of white net and black Chantilly lace. The present reigning fancy is white Liberty satin, with a dainty yoke of very sheer lace and heavy Venise lace inserted near the outer edge of the yoke. White chiffon cloth, with pipings and folds of Liberty satin makes a charming waist, softer and more delicate than those of Liberty satin. The stylish all-black waist is of silk Brussels net, with black taffeta silk folds, or Heavy Venise lace. Sleeves are three-quarter length, and collars as high as it is possible to wear them.

A JUDICIOUS PURCHASE.

The value of a handsome separate skirt can scarcely be over-estimated. French voile, panama, chiffon broadcloth and taffeta silk skirts are shown in the familiar plaited model, also the circular shape, trimmed with folds, ribbon or straps finished by buttons, and suitable for day or evening wear. A handsome taffeta silk skirt and white satin waist constitutes a toilette appropriate for all but the most ceremonious evening entertainments.

EVENING WRAPS.

These are long and loose with a view to the preservation of the dainty costume beneath, and are with scarcely an exception of white or pale-hued broadcloth, and trimmed with some variety of braid, large buttons, and often silk cord and tassels. Sleeves are in Japanese style as a rule, although some very new cloaks have an embroidered sling around the armhole, and the large sleeve is confined at the wrist by a cuff. A novelty is a semi-fitted piece at the back, broad at the shoulders, tapering in at the waist then out again, with six buttons (three on each side) fully as large as butter plates.
