AMERICAN MANUFACTURES.

We hear from every part of the country favorable reports of the establishment and progress of different kinds of manufactures. Our fair sisters in this commonwealth have brought the manufacture of Chip Hats to a state of perfection which reflects the highest honor on their taste, industry and patriotism—and which saves to the country several hundred thousand dollars annually, which would otherwise be sent abroad for this article of common convenience and ornament.

The gentlemen Hatters are determined not to be out done by their patriotic sisters in the country. They have associated into companies for the purpose of manufacturing and vending American hats on an extensive scale, and adopted such regulations as will prevent imposition, by establishing a uniformity of price to their hats proportioned to their value, and which while it secures a reasonable profit to the companies, will give them a preference to those imported.

Machines for spinning Cotton are increasing in number, while their proprietors find an increasing prospect of profit in their establishment. We may fairly anticipate the time as at no great distance when all our cotton clothes for which we have so great a demand will be supplied at home. Weavers from abroad will find their way to our shores as we have a demand for their labor—the yarn supplied at a small, but certain profit, by the spinning machines, will be bought by the frugal people of the country, and made into clothes of various kinds for family use. Thus will this raw material produced in such abundance by our country, (and which has principally been sent to foreign markets) become a vast source of national wealth, distributed through every part of the union through the medium of capital well employed, and of that domestic economy which seeks competence, ease and independence, by the sure means of industry and frugality.

It has generally been thought that the finer woollen clothes could be imported cheaper than they could be made at home. We perceive no objections to woollen manufactures that do not apply to cotton, except the quality of our wool, to which our farmers have generally been very inattentive. This objection bids fair however to be in a great degree surmounted by the rapid increase of the breed of Merino sheep in many
