THOUSAND WORD A MINUTE TELEGRAPH IN OPERATION.

Mayor of Boston Inaugurates Telepost Service—One Cent a Word the Highest Rate For Any Distance.

"In sending you the first Telepost message between Boston and Portland I extend congratulations upon the successful inauguration of quicker and cheaper means of communication which automatic telegraphy has now brought about and which cannot fail to be a great boon to the people of our own and other municipalities."

With this message to the mayor of Portland, Me., Mayor George A. Hibbard of Boston announced the opening of the lines of the new telegraph company, the Telepost. This system, which sends and receives wire messages at 1,000 wards a minute, makes possible so many economies that the new company is able to make a rate of 25 cents for twenty-five words between all points. On Teleposts delivered at destination through the mails the rate is 25 cents for fifty words, telecards 10 cents for ten words.

One of the best descriptions of the Delany automatic system controlled by the Telepost is given in the report of the Franklin Institute, just made public, awarding Patrick B. Delany the Elliott Cresson gold medal. In making this award the Franklin Institute authorities describe the Delany system as "the latest development in automatic telegraphy."

The system embraces both electromagnetic and electro-chemical methods of receiving messages and transmitting them by perforated tapes. Referring to the main features of the Delany system, the Franklin institute report says:

Gould Killed Former Automatic Co.

The most notable use of the chemical system was by the Automatic Telegraph company, which built lines in 1871 from New York to Washington and Charleston, with offices at Philadelphia and other intermediate points. It continued in business for about three years with fair success, when Jay Gould obtained control of the stock and sold it to Vanderbilt and Western Union interests. Delany, Edison, Johnson and some other well known electrical engineers were prominent in that company, Mr. Delany being its general manager. He has never wavered in his belief that automatic telegraphy must eventually become universal.

The principal difficulty encountered by all high speed telegraphs and which gave the old automatic line the most trouble is "retardation," or the "static charge," or "capacity," of the circuit.

The most important of the Delany patents deals with the objectionable static charge. In this patent Mr. Delany describes a method of utilizing the "capacity" of the circuit in producing the record on the receiving tape.

The capacity of the line as a disturbing factor having been removed, it is a short step to increase the speed and distance over which chemical telegraphs may be operated.

Tested at 1,200 Words a Minute.

The committee saw the Delany apparatus in operation on two occasions and tested the speed of transmission of the chemical system at 1,200 words a minute. The record on the tape was perfect, much more uniform than could possibly have been made by hand transmission.

The commercial importance of Mr. Delany's completed system of high speed automatic telegraphy and particularly of his elimination of that bane of telegraphy, the static charge, or retardation, becomes more and more evident as its application to existing conditions is considered. High speed upon long or short lines is now assured. The carrying capacity of a line is made sixtyfold greater than hand worked lines. Expert service is reduced to a minimum. Errors in transmission are eliminated. Line maintenance is decreased in proportion to increased speed. As a result of these conditions the cost of service can be made so low that the volume of business should be very great.

WOMEN SCHOOLTEACHERS MAKE WAR ON HUGHES.

Working In New York to Defeat the Governor Because He Vetoed the Equal Pay Bill.

Women schoolteachers of New York city have leagued themselves with the race track gamblers, the machine politicians and the liquor men to defeat Governor Hughes. Formal announcement to this effect has been made by the president of the Interborough Association of Women Teachers, which is now carrying on an active campaign against Governor Hughes in Greater New York and throughout the state, as well as against all members of the legislature who voted against the so called teachers' equal pay bill.

The women teachers admit that they are trying to defeat Hughes because he vetoed the equal pay bill. They are also working actively in behalf of the Democratic candidates Whalen and Palmer, who favored the bill that would have cost Greater New York $10,000,000 in additional salaries.

This peculiar political partnership of the women teachers with the more sinister elements opposed to Governor Hughes has caused a good deal of questioning as to the disinterested quality of "the elevating influence of the woman teacher," about which so much was heard in the equal pay campaign. All who are concerned as to Governor Hughes' re-election condemn in unmeasured terms the effort of the women teachers to defeat him on the sole ground that he disapproved a bill in which they were pecuniarily interested.

CURIOSITIES OF DIET.

How Nature Adapts Food to Man and Man to Food.

GREAT VALUE OF CEREALS.

Why People Can Eat Bread at Every Meal Without Getting Tired of It. The Fruits of the Burning Tropics and the Fats of the Frozen Arctic.

Modern science has shown that nature provides food for mankind with marvelous care and foresight. The human system requires a certain amount of proteid daily to replace wornout muscle and tissue. Fish and meat supply this in large quantities. In hot climates, however, these spoil so quickly that their use is limited. Nature, as if to compensate for this, has given to certain tropical fruits a much larger quantity of proteid than northern fruits contain. Thus government analysis shows that figs have five units or calories to the ounce, dates two and five-tenths and bananas one and five-tenths. Apples have five-tenths, peaches nine-tenths and pears seven-tenths. Probably the figs and dates tested had lost part of their moisture, and some allowance should be made for this.

The Arab can, therefore, maintain his vigor on a diet chiefly plucked from trees. Henry M. Stanley and his white companions subsisted almost entirely on banana flour for two years in the African jungle. Their freedom from disease was in part attributed to the wholesomeness of this diet. The dried banana contains 20 per cent of proteid, about double that of ordinary wheat flour.

At the opening of the mango season in Jamaica many of the natives practically live on this fruit for two or three weeks. They fairly revel in it. An Englishman who was familiar with the science of diet could not understand how they could not only maintain their health on this fare, but actually grow sleek and fat. He knew that an effort to live on the fruits of his native country would result in weakness, sickness and eventual death. Chemical analysis showed, however, that the mango contained enough proteid to supply the bodily needs.

If nature has been thus kind in adapting food to man's uses, she has been equally so in adapting man to his food. You may have wondered why people can eat bread at every meal without tiring of it. The difficulty of eating one quail a day for thirty days is well known. Even such delicacies as asparagus and strawberries cause an aversion when served too frequently. Nature sends men a never failing appetite for cereals because they are altogether the most valuable of foods. They contain a considerable amount of proteid, their salts are of importance to the organism, they are readily digested when properly cooked, and they furnish a great deal of nourishment in small bulk.

Thus wheat flour, cornmeal, oatmeal (dry) and rice (dry) have more than 100 units to the ounce. Baked potatoes have 32.7 units, cabbage has 9.2, spinach 7, asparagus 6.5, apples 18.4, strawberries 11.4, spring chicken 19.5 and tenderloin of beef broiled 5.9. If a man tried to get even half of his nutrition from the coarse vegetables, which have a considerable indigestible residue, he would have to eat pounds of them daily, and his stomach would be sadly overburdened. Nature gives us the desire for a varied diet, and science shows that this is altogether the best for us.

In the arctic regions there is little vegetation. Man must live almost wholly on animal foods. Fish and meat would not suffice, because they contain only proteids. These would replace wornout muscle and tissue, but could not be burned in the body to generate heat and energy. Fats, however, consist of carbon and hydrogen, which are the chief components of the foods of vegetable origin and supply the fuel needed by the body. The polar animals have fat in abundance, but residents of the temperate and torrid zones can eat it only in limited quantities. To them the mere thought of chewing chunks of grease is nauseating.

The children of the frozen north, however, are endowed not only with the ability to eat and to digest large quantities of fat, but with a keen appetite for it. One who is sensitive to such impressions must turn away when he sees the natives of southern Alaska, the Thlinkits, swallowing seal oil flavored by salmon berries with the gusto of a boy over ice cream. The Eskimos, farther north, will eat blubber, slightly cooked in the flames, to an indefinite number of pounds.—New York Tribune.

Her Object Attained.

"Forgive me, my dear," said the gossip humbly, "but I thoughtlessly mentioned to Mrs. Brown the things that you told me in strict confidence."

"There is nothing to forgive," replied the wise woman pleasantly. "It was for that very purpose that I told them to you in strict confidence."—Chicago Post.

Getting Even.

"You are half an hour late this morning," said a schoolmaster to a scholar.

"Yes, sir," replied the boy, who had been "kept in" the day before. "It was late yesterday when I got home!"—London Tit-Bits.

We give altogether too little importance to what we say to others and too much to what they say to us.—Eliot.
