A SURGICAL OPERATION

If there is any one thing that a woman dreads more than another it is a surgical operation.

We can state without fear of a contradiction that there are hundreds, yes, thousands, of operations performed upon women in our hospitals which are entirely unnecessary and many have been avoided by

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

For proof of this statement read the following letters.

Mrs. Barbara Base, of Kingman, Kansas, writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"For eight years I suffered from the most severe form of female troubles and was told that an operation was my only hope of recovery. I wrote Mrs. Pinkham for advice, and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has saved my life and made me a well woman."

Mrs. Arthur R. House, of Church Road, Moorestown, N. J., writes:

"I feel it is my duty to let people know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered from female troubles, and last March my physician decided that an operation was necessary. My husband objected, and urged me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and to-day I am well and strong."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, and backache.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

William H. Brown, Imogen Brown, W. Murray Carr, Amanda K. Carr, T. B. Hynson Brown, Grace Merryman, Elizabeth Stockdale Merryman, Margaret Merryman, Theodore Virginia Hennesy, Lambert Hennesy, Lilly Merryman, Thomas R. Brown, Jean M. Brown, Mary E. Brown, Duncan K. Brent, Harriet C. Brent, Mary C. Brown, Hallie Carrington Brown.

In the Circuit Court for Kent County in Equity. No. 1688.

THE OBJECT of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of certain property in Kent county, in the State of Maryland, which was devised by the last will and testament of Thomas R. Brown, late of the city of Baltimore, deceased, to his children as tenants in common.

The bill states that the said Thomas R. Brown departed this life in the year 1875, seized and possessed of certain real estate in Kent county, Maryland, and elsewhere, leaving his last Will and Testament, which was duly admitted to probate by the Orphans Court of Baltimore city, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Wills of said city.

That by the provisions of said Will he devised said Real Estate to his four children in equal shares, as tenants in common, namely to Dr. Thomas R. Brown, Mary L. Merryman, William H. Brown and James Brown, to each a fourth part, and he bequeathed to his widow, Mary A. B. Brown, an annuity of twelve hundred dollars per annum during her natural life. That subsequently the said children, with the consent of the said widow, divided certain of said real estate among themselves, and executed deeds therefor, each to the other, in which the said widow united.

That a certain portion of said real estate, a tract of land in said Kent county called Gresham Hall was left undivided. That Dr. Thomas R. Brown married Hallie Carrington and departed this life in the year 1879, leaving Thomas R. Brown, James Brown, Harriett C. Brown and Mary C. Brown, his children and heirs at law, and that said Thomas R. Brown married Jean M. Albert and resides in the city of Baltimore, that James Brown married Mary A. Bowman and resides in said city of Baltimore, that Harriett C. Brown married Duncan K. Brent and resides in Baltimore as does the said Mary C. Brown and Hallie Carrington Brown.

That James Brown married Imogen Bechtel and departed this life intestate in the year 1895, leaving Amanda K. Brown who intermarried with W. Murray Carr, and T. B. Hynson Brown his children and heirs at law, that said W. M. and Amanda K. Carr reside in the city of Pittsburg in the State of Pennsylvania, and said T. B. Hynson Brown resides in the city of Baltimore.

That William H. Brown married the said Imogen Brown and that they both reside in Baltimore.

That said Mary L. Merryman married Richard S. Merryman and that both of them are dead, and left the following children and heirs at law surviving them: William H. B. Merryman, Richard S. Merryman, Theodore Virgina, and Lilly; that said W. H. B. Merryman married Alice, and resides with his wife in Brooklyn, New York; that Richd S. Merryman married Elizabeth Stocksdale, and died leaving his widow and a daughter Margaret, who is an infant surviving him who live in the State of Illinois; that Theodore Virginia married Lambert Hennesy, and live in Chicago, State of Illinois; that the condition and residence of Lilly is unknown.

That the said Mary A. B. Brown, widow of the testator, Thomas R. Brown departed this life in the city of Baltimore about the month of February of the present year.

That about the year 1898 the undivided one-fourth interest of James Brown in said Gresham Hall farm was sold and conveyed to the said William H. Brown.

That the said Real Estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties entitled and in order to make division of said interests, it will be necessary that said real estate be sold.

It is thereupon this 5th day of November 1908 ordered, by the Circuit Court of Kent County in Equity, that the plaintiff by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in said Kent County, once in each of four successive weeks before the 7th day of December, give notice to the said non-resident defendants of the object and substance of this Bill warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 26th day of December next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

Duncan's Guide.

By SIDNEY HEDGES COLE.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

When Duncan accepted Mrs. Harvey's invitation to join her house party in the mountains that worthy lady was overjoyed.

Here, indeed, was the very man she had been seeking—a man whose name was on everybody's lips, a veritable lion, who would make her the envy of all her set.

He was the man who had spent a month in Lassa and who had talked with the grand lama himself, a drawing card of the highest magnitude. Mrs. Harvey spent a good half day in congratulating herself and wondering just how she had been able to manage it.

She pictured him as she had last seen him, a happy, exuberant, boyish young man who would entertain her other guests by the hour with most absorbing anecdotes of his work, his travel and the dangers he had undergone.

HE TURNED SUDDENLY AND CAUGHT HER HAND IN HIS OWN.

Duncan arrived duly. The guests, who were assembled on the wide veranda, saw Tim bring the big road car up to the steps, saw a bronzed, grave faced young man climb out and punctiliously greet Mrs. Harvey as "Cousin Mary."

If they had expected any signs of his far heralded exploits about him, any gray hairs on his head or any marks of suffering upon his face, they were doomed to disappointment. He was fair haired, sleek, well groomed.

Indeed, he looked much more like a prosperous business man on a week ned vacation than a celebrity with whose name two continents were ringing.

At dinner that night Mrs. Harvey made her first attempt to draw him out.

"Now, Ted," she suggested as the coffee was served, "we're all impatient to hear about it."

Duncan looked surprised. "About what, Cousin Mary?" he asked.

"What, indeed?" she returned. "Your recent triumph in Lassa, of course."

Duncan actually blushed under his coat of tan and squirmed uneasily in his chair as he realized all the eyes at the table were upon him.

"Oh, that!" he said. "It's nothing—really nothing. It's not worth the telling."

"But the papers said"—

"The papers," he interrupted; "the yellow sheets, you mean, Cousin Mary. They must have news. They'll make something out of the most hopeless material."

"You talked with the grand lama. Tell us about him. What did he say?"

Duncan laughed with some embarrassment. "Nice little chap, the lama. Youngish, he is, with a lean face and keen eyes. We had quite a gossiping bee through an interpreter. Seemed most interested in the color of my hair, the lama did. Wanted to know what made it yellow. I tried to tell him it was nature and not peroxide that did it, but the interpreter got all tangled up trying to put it right, and the lama's face was like a graven image. I guess the thing didn't go."

In self defense he turned to the girl at his left.

"What was your score on the links this afternoon?" he asked. "Forty-one? Fine! Wish I could do as good as that."

As an attraction, an entertainer of Mrs. Harvey's guests, Duncan proved a signal failure. He was taciturn, shy, ill at ease. The guests on their part stood rather in awe of the big, grave young man with the slow smile and the thoughtful eyes.

They imagined he found them trivial, not worth his efforts. When they were on the links or putting the horses to the hurdles behind the stables, he took long solitary rambles across the mountains.

When they played bridge or danced in the evening, he sat alone on the veranda, smoking innumerable cigarettes. Mrs. Harvey, in frank disappointment, told herself he was impossible.

The usual game of bridge was in full swing one evening and Duncan was sitting quite alone on one end of the veranda, looking at the great bulk of the mountains looming dimly in the moonlight.

He heard the door open softly, and, turning, he saw Eleanor Graydon coming toward him. Duncan's pulses quickened. There was something about this tall, beautiful girl, with her cool voice and her steady brown eyes, that he found most attractive—most disquietingly attractive, indeed.

She laughed softly as she saw him there.

"Deserter!" she taunted. "You and your pose of solitude are getting on Mrs. Harvey's nerves. I can see it. Really, I'm beginning to believe you conceited."

Duncan drew up a chair. "Won't you sit here for a minute and watch these mountains with me?" said he. "I'm—I'm"— He paused.

"You're what?" she prompted.

"Lonely," he finished, with such evident sincerity in his voice that the girl felt a little pang of remorse.

"I presume you find us stupid," said she, sitting down beside him. "After such a crowded life as yours has been all this must be very tame."

"Tame?" he said, with sudden earnestness. "Tame? Oh, heavens, no!"

"You give us that impression anyway."

"Do I?" said he. He leaned forward in his chair. "Do you know how I feel here? Will you respect my secret if I tell you?"

She nodded.

"Well, then, like a fish out of water. I'm afraid—honestly and actually afraid. You see, all my life I have traveled. I've been into the out of the way places of the earth. I haven't had time to cultivate any of the graces of civilization. All in all, I'm a barbarian, more or less.

"I've looked forward to this—to this coming here to Cousin Mary's and meeting all these people of your world more than I can tell you. But it has taught me something about myself. Much as I wish I fitted in this niche, I'm impossible. As a participator in social functions in the accepted sense of the term I'm hopeless."

The girl looked at him with a quiet smile.

"I'll take back that remark about your conceit and ask your forgiveness for it, too," said she. "Oh, you boy! You great, big hearted, simple boy! You envy us in this silly, meaningless life of ours—you who have been doing something! I wish you might know how I envy that life of yours!"

"Do you mean that—really?" he cried.

"It is worth a thousand lives like ours."

"But I am isolated. I am alone. I have cut myself off from all that I really want. I want to be like these other men here. I want to talk to you as they do—to be as unafraid of you as they are."

"That? Oh, pooh!" she laughed. "Tell me, when you go into an unknown country what do you do before you try to travel it—take a guide, don't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, that's what you must do here. Take a guide. Then I'll warrant in a week—in a day—you'll know the ropes from beginning to end."

"A guide," he repeated musingly. "Yes, that's it. I must take a guide to show me into civilization. My work is done now. I want to live in my own country; therefore I must have that guide. I—I—there is only one I want, and I want her for life," he stammered, but he looked at her with no uncertain light in his eyes. "I am presumptuous, I know. I am nothing but a barbarian, as I told you, but perhaps with the guide it might be different."

He turned suddenly and caught her hand in his own. "Can I have that guide?" he asked unsteadily.

The girl arose. Her face was scarlet, but her eyes were looking into his.

"Your first lesson will be in bridge," he said. "Come in and I'll teach you."

But Duncan caught her in his arms and held her fast.

"Yes, dear," she murmured. "I loved you from the very first, you were so—so unspoiled by what I'm going to guide you into."

Japanese Calendar.

Reference is frequently made to the floral calendar of Japan. What this calendar is is explained in the Housekeeper. The Japanese are extremely fond of all flowers, and they have therefore made a calendar from them, giving to each month a favorite blossom or leaf.

Thus the pine, the emblem of lasting prosperity and life, belongs to January, and its branches are used to decorate all houses on New Year's day.

To February belong the blossoms of the plum tree, which stand for purity, and the beautiful blossoms of the peach tree, to which young girls are compared, are associated with the month of March.

Next the cherry blossom, the most beloved of all flowers, is held to belong to April, and to May are assigned the gorgeous clusters of the wistaria vine.

The iris flower, to which are compared the strength and beauty of young boys, belongs to June, and July has the glory and perfume of the water lily. The flowering hibiscus tree attaches its beauty to the month of August, while September lays claim to the exquisite charm of the azalea.

The royal flower of Japan, the chrysanthemum, which forms a part of the crest of the imperial family, belongs to the month of October, while to November is given the maple leaf, admired for its decorative quality.

Finally, with December is associated the beautiful camellia, which blooms in the gardens even in the midst of snow.

A Pepys Dinner.

My wife had got ready a very fine dinner—viz, a dish of marrow bones, a leg of mutton, a loin of veal, a dish of fowl, three pullets and two dozens of larks all in a dish, a great tart, a neat's tongue, a dish of anchovies, a dish of prawns and cheese.—Pepys' Diary.
