Health Services In The Schools

Youngsters attending public schools in the Counties of Maryland, have the benefit of health services carried on under the joint auspices of the State and County Department of Health and the Department of Education. The services include the general halth supervision of the children, physical examinations, special services for the control or prevention of communicable diseases, and the sanitary supervision of the water supply systems and sewage disposal arrangements.

The annual physical examination of the children in the lower grades, by the County Health officers, was started soon after the schools opened. Dental clinics were resumed also. In announcing the arrangements for the school year, Dr. Riley said that the object of the examination was twofold: First to detect conditions that might lead to illness later on or that might develop into a parmanent handicap if allowed to run on. Second, to bring such conditions to the attention of the parents, so that they may be atended to, promptly..

"The younger children are selected for the examinations," he said, "so that unfavorable conditions may be discovered while they are in the early stages when they can be corrected most readily. Children in the older grades will be examined at the request of the teachers, and any child who was scheduled for a re-checking up, will of course be included among those who will be examined.

"Parents are always welcome at the examination and in some schools special arrangements are made for them to be present. Largely through the interest of the parent-teacher associations, and the service clubs, and through the follow-up work of the county nurses, greater effort is made each year to have unfavorable conditions attended to, promptly.

"Because good or faulty nutrition has such an important part in keeping a child physically fit, the parent-teacher associations are greatly interested, also, in the nutritional advice offered in many of the schools, in connection with the school lunches, and the school cafterias. This is one of the newer features of the health servics and like all the rest is carried on jointly by the school authorities and the health department.

"These are only part of the health services in the schools. Any account would be incomplete if mention were not made of the activities carried on for the control or prevention of the diseases that spread so rapidly from child to child. Inspections of children in the schools, who have been exposed to any of the 'catching' diseases—scarlet fever, measles, mumps, chicken-pox, diphtheria, or any of the rest—by the health officer or public health nurse, are very important part of the services. Inspections are made daily, if necessary, to prevent the sprad of suc hdiseases.

"Last year, nearly 50,000 children in the counties had the benefit of the medical examinations. Over 96,000 inspections were made in connection with the general health program, or to prevent the spread of communicable diseases; and over 14,000 visits were made to the homes of the children, in connection with these services."

Reporters here say the week's best Washington crack was not made by a National Capital reporter but by Leonard Lyons, New York columnist. Lyons quoted an International Casino visitor as saying: "For two weeks now I've been at the White House, trying to get past Roosevelt, to see Corcoran."

Diogenes Inquires

A mon of bad character, but pretended goodness, once made a grand gesture by placing over his door a sign bearing the inscription: "Let nothing bad enter here."

But the hypocrite's pretensions were all set at naught when, on the following day, Diogenes, passing his house, read theinscription and inquired in a loud voice, "Where does the owner enter?"

Japanese Version Of Safety

"The following notice was posted outside a Tokio police station for the benefit of English-speaking travelers:

1. At the first raise of police hand, stop rapidly.
2. Do not pass him by or otherwise disrespect him.
3. When a passenger of the foot hove in sight, tootle the horn. Trumpet at him. Melodiously at first, but if he still obstacles your passage, tootle at him with vigor, and express by mouth the warning — Hi! Hi!
4. Beware the wandering horse that he shall not take fright. Do not explode the exhaust box at him. Go smoothly by.
5. Give big space to the festive dog.
6. Go soothingly in the grease mud, as there lurks the skid demon.
7. Avoid entanglement of dog with your wheel spoke.
8. Press the brakes of the foot as you roll around the corner to save collapse and tie-up."

Some Hallowe'en 'Don'ts'

Warning against Hallowe'en vandalism involving damage to automobiles is sounded by the Keystone Automobile Club.

Parents and school teachers are strongly urged by the Club to instruct children against the practice of defacing motor vehicles as part of their merry-making activities.

"Each year at Hallowe'en time," said Matthew P. Hanley, Manager of the Eastern Shore Division of the Club, "motorists are subjected to destructive acts of children that are totally inexcusable. Painting and marking cars with chalk and soap is a most obnoxious practice. The finish on many expensive cars has been virtually ruined on 'mischief' nights in past years.

"Breaking of milk bottles is another practice that should be discouraged. The motoring public is penalized thousands of dollars for damage due to this cause. When 'fun' reaches this expensive stage, it is no longer 'fun' but plain vandalism.

"Broken door handles, stolen radiator caps and gas tank caps are other items of needless expense."

In the past ten years, Americans have bought six billion electric light bulbs.

70,000 Machines Speed Harvest

About 70,000 mechanical corn pickers are available for use in the cornfields this season, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics estimates. This compares with fewer than 10,000 on farms in 1920. Last year about 43 percent of the corn acreage in Illinois was harvested by mechanical pickers and about 35 percent in Iowa and Minnesota. Estimates for other States run: Indiana, 22 percent; S. Dakota, 18 percent; Ohio, 12 percent; and Michigan, Wisconsin, and N. Dakota each about 5 percent of the acreage. In 10 to 40 States reporting there were no records of mechanical pickers, and 12 States reported less than 1 percent of the acreage so harvested.

Adoption of the power take-off, the wagon hitch, and the mounted picker were improvements that led to an increase in power harvesting of corn in the late 1920's. In 1937 and 1938 farmers bought approximately 28,000 pickers. Pickers are mostly used where corn yields and corn acreages are high and the development of high-yilding hybrid corns with better root development and greater resistance to storm damage has favored mechanical picking.

The Bureau estimates that the one-row picker results in a saving of at least one-third of the labor involved in the corn harvest, and the two-row picker cuts the labor requirement in half. Used mainly on the most productive corn acreage, the pickers last year covered about 13 percent of the total acreage but gathered about 20 percent of the crop.

For economy in operation, a one-row picker should harvest about 80 to 100 acres of good corn, the two-row picker about twice as much. Many owners of the machines do not cultivate as much corn as this but cut the overhead charges on their equipment by doing custom picking for neighbors. Increased use of mechanical pickers has caused a steady decline in demand for hand huskers.

Dangers In Fall Driving

Hazardous road conditions due to falling leaves are responsible for many accidents in October and early November, the Keystone Automobile Club warns in a bulletin urging motorists to take proper precautions in wet weather.

Wet leaves, it is pointed out, make highways extremely treacherous. Motorists should not attempt quick stops on roads covered with soggy foliage, because of the skidding danger.

Another factor to be considered in driving at this time of year is early darkness. October is considered the worst month for early-evening accidents, the combination of dusk, darkness and fatigue contributing to the accident toll.

Pedestrians, too, are in a dangerous "spot" in October, because of lighting conditions. The Club bulletin emphasizes that pedestrians should never take it for granted a motorist can see them. Lights from two cars approaching from different directions may "cancel" each other so far as pedestrian visibility is concerned, it is asserted, an dthe walker who assumes the driver can see him is taking a big chance.

Pedestrians are strongly urged to walk facing traffic on highways, even though the discomfort of looking into headlights is distasteful to many persons. The danger of accident along open roads is greatly minimized when the walker can see whether the car is in position to turn out for him. It is a simple matter to step off the paved edge of the roadway when danger impends, but the walker with his back to traffic has very little chance to escape injury if the motorist cannot see him in time to stop.

In the 56 years ending in 1936 patented inventions were directly responsible for the creation of at least 14 new industries in this country. These new industries increased the total employment by 18% during that period.
