WHOOPING COUGH.

A Highly Contagious Disease That Should Not Be Neglected.

Many persons regard whooping cough as tedious and annoying, but quite without serious importance. Unfortunately that mistake often leads to the neglect of the disease itself and the failure to isolate the patient properly. Recent statistics show that of the children under one year of age who have whooping cough one in four dies. The mortality decreases rapidly with advancing age, and at five years of age only one patient in fifty dies. Ten thousand children die of this disease every year in the United States.

Even when whooping cough does not result fatally it is still to be dreaded, for it may be followed by consumption, since the patient's powers of resistance are often greatly weakened by the violent and exhausting cough.

The disease is highly contagious, although the offending germ has not yet been discovered. Consequently the mother or the nurse of a child with whooping cough ought never to take it into public conveyances or to entertainments or send it to school or to church—anywhere, in short, where it will expose other children to the infection.

The disease begins like a simple cold in the head and rapidly goes to the chest. The cough is at first short and sharp, but gradually increases in severity and occurs in paroxysms. At the end of one of these attacks the air is pumped completely out of the lungs and the child feels that he must take a deep breath at once. But now a spasm of the larynx occurs, and only a small opening is left for the air to enter. Through this opening the child draws his eager breath and thus makes the peculiar noise of "whoop" that gives the disease its name.

Often vomiting follows a severe attack of coughing, and sometimes there is nosebleed or hemorrhage from the throat or into the eyes.

Never neglect the treatment of whooping cough. At present we know of no cure for the disease, but the child should always be under the care of a physician, who can do much to mitigate the severity of the cough and to prevent serious complications.—Youth's Companion.

DO YOU LOVE YOUR WORK?

If You Do Not, Then You Are Simply Wasting Your Efforts.

If your work is a burden, if it is drudgery to you, you have not found your place in life. If you are in the right place you will feel every faculty and function in you tugging away at your purpose with delight. Everything within you will give its consent, its approval to your choice.

The mental attitude which we hold toward our work or our aim has everything to do with what we accomplish. If you go to your work like a slave lashed to his task and see in it only drudgery; if you work without hope, see no future in what you are doing beyond getting a bare living; if you see no light ahead, nothing but poverty, deprivation and hard work all your life; if you think that you are destined to such a hard life, you cannot expect to get anything else than that for which you look.

Every one should go to his work with the same eager spirit as the great master approaches his canvas—with his soul, led by a great longing and heart hunger, an all absorbing eagerness to transpose to the canvas the mighty picture which is consuming his soul.

If you approach your work as though it were a burden which you would gladly get rid of if you could and do it merely from a sense of duty you will continue to be a nobody in the world. That sort of spirit never lifts a man out of mediocrity.—Orison Swett Marden in Nautilus Magazine.

Queer Uses For the Crocus.

The crocus is nowadays held to justify its existence by its beauty, but in bygone centuries it was cultivated with an eye to profit, its saffron being in high demand both as an aromatic and as a flavoring for cakes and pies. A distillation of crocus blossoms also was held to be good for strengthening the lungs and heart and as a preventive of plague. Evidence of the flower's commercial value survives in the name of the chief center of its cultivation, Saffron Walden, but saffron nowadays is appreciated only by the sparrows, which wreck the crocuses to obtain it.—London Chronicle.

A Mother's Kiss.

"Having grossly offended my mother one day," wrote Mme. Schreck, "I stood expecting reproof in return. To my amazement that beautiful woman stooped and kissed me. I burst into tears. I was overwhelmed with shame. It seemed to me I never again could do enough to show her the loyalty of my heart."—Mothers' Magazine.

A Sad Fall.

"Pop, did you hurt yourself much last night?"

"Hurt myself! What on earth does the child mean?"

"Why, Jimmy Smith's papa said he saw you fall off the water wagon."—Baltimore American.
