salutary to herself, was harrowing to him.

"Explain this mystery, dear Clara, and moderate these transports. How have you recovered the lost treasure?"

"Oh! it was the strangest circumstance! Who do you think had it, but Mrs. Clifton, that angel sent down from heaven, for our especial blessing."

"You know I went there to-day, about the time you took the walk in the woods. My heart was so full of grief for my folly, and gratitude for her kindness, I thought it would have burst, and I told her all; no, not quite all—for I could not bring myself to tell her that it contained your property; her eye seemed to upbraid me so for betraying the trust; but again it beamed with joy because she could restore to me both sacred relics."

Here she held up the beads, now a thousand times more precious to her than all the chains in the world.

"The pedler called there, after he left me. She recognized the trunk, as it bore the name of a friend."

Edward's cheek burned with emotion—for his own name, Edward Stanley, was wrought upon the velvet lining, but Clara went breathlessly on.

"She gathered from the pedler the history of the beads, and purchased them both, that she might, on some future day, have the pleasure of restoring them. She understood the sacrifice my foolish vanity had made, and anticipated the repentence that would follow. Is she not a friend, the best and kindest, and ought we not to love her as our own souls? And can you forgive me, Edward—will you forgive me, though I fear I shall never be able to pardon myself?"

"Forgive you, my sister? Let me only see once more, the sweet, unaffected girl, who was the object of my approbation, as well as my love, and I ask nothing more."

He now examined the secret recess of the trunk, and found the papers safe and untouched. Their value transcended his most sanguine expectations.—He could redeem the paternal dwelling, meet the demands which had involved them in distress, and still find himself a comparatively rich man.

Clara ran out of the room, and, bringing the chain—the "cause of all her wo,"—she put it in a conspicuous corner of her work-box.

"I will never wear this paltry bauble again," cried she; 'but I will keep it as a momento of my vanity, and a pledge of my reformation. I will look at it a few moments every day, as the lady did upon the skeleton of her lover, to remind me of the sins of mortality."

When Clara had left them with a joyous "good night," Mrs. Stanley drew her chair next to her son, and looked earnestly in his face.

"There is something I ought to mention," said she, "and yet I cannot, to damp your present satisfaction. I have been told of an intended marriage, which I fear will disappoint your fondest hopes. I trust, however, you have too much honest pride to suffer your feelings to prey upon your happiness."

Edward started up, and pushed his chair against the wall with a violent rebound.

"I cannot bear it, mother—I believe it would drive me mad after all I have dared to dream to-night. I might, perhaps, live without her, but I could not live to see her married to another.—Fool, credulous fool that I was, to believe that dotard's prophecy!"

He sat down again in the chair which Clara had left, and, throwing his arms across the table, bent his face over them, and remained silent.

"Alas! my son," cried Mrs. Stanley, "I feared it would be so. Mr. Morton feels for you the tenderness of a father, but"——

"Mr. Morton, did you say?" cried Edward, starting up again, at the risk of upsetting chairs, tables and lamps.—"I believe I am out of my senses; and it is Fanny Morton who is going to be married?"

The sudden change in his countenance, from despair to composure, quite electrified Mrs. Stanley. She could not comprehend such great and sudden self-control.

"Mr. Morton tells me," she continued "that Fanny is addressed by a gentleman of wealth and respectability, and one who is every way a desirable connexion. He has learned from Fanny that no engagement subsisted between you; but he seemed apprehensive that your affections were interested, and wished me to soften the intelligence as much as possible."

Edward smiled. "Tell Mr. Morton I thank him for his kind consideration, for no one can rejoice in Fanny's prospects more than I do."

Mrs. Stanley was bewildered, for she had not dreamed of his present infatuation.

"I cannot understand how resignation can be acquired so soon, especially after such a burst of frenzy. I fear it is merely assumed to spare my feelings."

"I cannot feign, dear mother, though I may conceal. Dismiss all fears upon this subject, for were Fanny to live a thousand years in all her virgin loveliness—if nature permitted such a reign to youth and beauty—she would never be sought after as the bride of your son."

He kissed his mother, and bade her a hasty "good night," anxious to avoid explanation on a subject which had already agitated him so much.

The next day, when he reflected on his extraordinary interview with the old lady of the stage-coach, and her incredible promise in his behalf, he became more than ever convinced of her mental hallucination. Yet there was too much method in her madness, if madness indeed existed, to allow him to slight the impressions of her words.—He was now independent, and hopes that before seemed presumptuous, now warmed every pulsation of his being.

"Shall I even now follow the sibyl's counsel?" said he to himself, as he bent his steps at evening towards Mrs. Clifton's door; but the moment he entered her presence, Aunt Bridget, her promises, and the world itself were forgotten. She met him with a smile, but there was a burning glow on her cheek, and a hurried glance of her eye, that indicated internal agitation. She attempted to converse on different topics, but her thoughts seemed to wander, and she at length became silent.

"I saw a friend of yours last night," said he with much embarrassment, for he knew not whether his confessions were unrevealed. "She is very singular, but extremely interesting in her eccentricities. Is she with you yet?"

"She is, and will be with us whenever you desire. Yet I would first speak with you, Mr. Stanley, and communicate an intelligence which I trust will not cost me the withdrawal of your friendship. You have known me rich, surrounded with all the appliances of wealth and fashion, and, as such, envied and admired. My fortune has been transferred into the hands of another, and you see me now destitute of that tinsel glare which threw a radiance around me, which was not my own.—Flatterers may desert me, but friends—I trust I may retain."

She extended her hand with an involuntary motion, and the glow forsook her cheek.

"Your fortune gone," exclaimed Edward, "and mine restored!" The next moment he was kneeling at her feet.—In no other attitude could he have expressed the depth of passion he now dared to utter. What he said he knew not, he only felt that he was breathing forth the hoarded and late hopeless love, of whose extent he had never before been fully conscious.

"Am I then loved for myself alone?" cried Mrs. Clifton; by one, too, from whom I have vainly waited this avowal, to justify my preference?"

She bowed her head upon the hands that Edward was clasping in his own, as if her soul shared the humility of his devotion. Who would have recognized the gay and brilliant heiress, who once reveled in the cold halls of fashion, in this tender and passionate woman?

"Oh!" exclaimed she, when the feelings of both became sufficiently calm for explanation, "were I still the child of affluence, I might have vainly looked for the testimony of that love which the vessel of love was so long a rebel to, to truth, and to nature. And now," added she, rising, "let me not, in the fulness of my heart's content, forget your old friend, who is waiting no doubt, with impatience, to greet you. You will probably be surprised to learn that she is the lawyer inheritor of my fortune, and that all I have been so profusely lavishing was her just due."

She smiled at Edward's unutterable look of astonishment, and closed the door. He was left but a few moments to his own bewildered thoughts, when the door again opened, and Aunt Bridget entered, in the same ancient cloak and hood, which seemed to be a part of herself.

"Wisest and best of counsellors," said he, advancing to meet her, and leading her to a seat on the sofa—"to you I owe the blessings of this hour.—It was surely a propitious star that shone upon me when I first seated myself beside you that memorable night.—Had you not come to prove your claim to her wealth, the spell that bound me would not yet have been broken, and a wall of separation might still have arisen between hearts that have been met and blended, and will continue to mingle through eternity."

Aunt Bridget turned away her head, and seemed suddenly to have lost the gift of speech.

Somewhat alarmed at her unusual silence, especially as he felt her shaking and trembling under the folds of her cloak, he leaned over, and tried to untie her hood, so as to give her air. Fearing she would fall into a fit, as she continued to tremble still more violently, he burst the ribbons asunder, for the knots seemed to tighten under his fingers, and the cloak, hood, and mob cap fell off simultaneously; the large green spectacles, too, dropped from the eyes which, laughing and brilliant, now flashed upon his own—and the arms which had been extended to support a far different personage, were folded in transport around the graceful form of Mrs. Clifton.

"Will you forgive me?" cried she, when she raised those beaming eyes from his shoulder, "the wiley deception I have practised? Will you forgive me for continuing a disguise through love which commenced from eccentric motives? Young and unprotected, I have sometimes found safety in this disfiguring garb. Like the Arabian monarch, I like, occasionally, the covering of a mask, that I may be able to read the deep mysteries of human nature. But my masquerade is over.—I have now read all I ever wished to learn. Promise not to love me less because the doom of riches still clings to me, and I will pledge life and fame, that you shall find in Aunt Bridget a faithful, true, and loving wife."

GOOD MEDICINES.

STABLER'S

is a pleasant Mixture, composed in agreement with the rules of Pharmacy, of the raputic agents, long known and celebrated for their peculiar efficacy in curing DIARRHŒA, and similar affections of the system. In its action, it ALLAYS NAUSEA and produces a healthy action of the LIVER, thus removing the cause at the same time that it cures the disease.

Opinion of Dr. JOHN ADDISON, Physician to the Baltimore Southern Dispensary.

Having a trial of your "Diarrhœa Cordial," and being also acquainted with the ingredients of which it is composed, it gives me much pleasure in adding my testimony to that of others in favor of its EXTRAORDINARY EFFICACY in the cure of "Diarrhœa and Summer Complaints in children and adults."

With respect, &c.,
JOHN ADDISON, M. D.

☞ Price 50 cts. per Bottle.

STABLER'S ANODYNE CHERRY

EXPECTORANT

Is confidently recommended to invalids as UNSURPASSED by any known preparation for the cure of COUGHS, HOARSENESS, and other forms of common colds; BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CROUP, CONSUMPTION in an early stage, and for the RELIEF of the Patient even in advanced stages of that Fatal Disease.

It combines, in a scientific manner, remedies of long esteemed value, with others of more recent discovery, and besides its soothing and tonic qualities, acts through the skin gently, and with great efficacy; for the cure of this class of diseases.

A number of the most respectable Physicians, to whom we have communicated a knowledge of the constituents of these medicines, have been pleased to favor us with their opinions, (some of them in writing,) that they are the best remedies they have ever been acquainted with for the cure of the diseases for which they are recommended.

OPINION OF DR. SAMUEL B. MARTIN,

One of the most experienced of the faculty in this city, and long celebrated for successful practice:

GENTLEMEN—I have carefully examined the component parts of your Diarrhœa Cordial, as well as your Anodyne Cherry Expectorant, and find them BOTH valuable compounds, the doses are safe and consistent with medical practice, and I do not hesitate to recommend them.

Your friend, &c., S. B. MARTIN, M. D.
Baltimore, June, 1852.

Certificate from Doct. JOHN ADDISON, Physician to the Baltimore Southern Dispensary.

HAVING been made acquainted with the ingredients which enter into the composition of your "Adodyne Cherry Expectorant," and having also made trial of its virtues, I have no hesitation in recommending it to the confidence and patronage of the public, as a most VALUABLE medicine in the treatment of the various diseases for which it is intended. JOHN ADDISON, M. D.

We beg leave, as convincing evidence of the highly valuable properties of the above named medicines, to refer to the annexed complimentary notice from sixteen of the most respectable Apothecaries and Pharmaceutists in the city of Baltimore, whom we have appointed our agents, and who have the several articles for sale.

The subscribers, Apothecaries and Pharmaceutists in the city of Baltimore, are satisfied that the preparations known of "Stabler's Anodyne Cherry Expectorant" and "Stabler's Diarrhœa Cordial," are medicines of great value, and very efficient for the relief and cure of the diseases for which they are recommended: they bear the evidence of skill and care in their preparation and style of putting up, and we take pleasure in recommending them to our customers.

STABLER'S

DR. CHAPMAN'S WORM MIXTURE.

Prepared from a Receipt invented by DR. JOHN CHAPMAN, a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of London

A Remedy more efficient than this is not known.

Many (perhaps one-half) of the diseases from which children suffer are occasioned by the presence of Worms in the system; and if neglected, give rise to the most uncomfortable and irritating feelings, violent pains, sickness at the stomach, emaciation and frequently to vomiting.

This medicine is an efficient, safe and pleasant remedy for their extermination; it contains all the virtues of the most approved vermifuge, and although it has been used by many thousands, and has been before the public for several years, it has never been known to fail in effecting a complete cure.

Extract from a letter received from S. S. FORTE, M. D., member of the Royal College of Surgeons, London.

To E. H. STABLER & Co. October 20th, 1851.

Gentlemen,—I some time last year, by accident, got hold of a few bottles of your Stabler's Dr. Chapman's Worm Mixture and used it in my practice with much unequalled success as induced me to send for 50 dozen.

* * * Last month ordered, through the same gentleman, 100 dozen. * * * You can ship me 50 dozen every three months from date of receipt of this, and draw for the amount, &c., &c.

Numerous certificates of cures of the most aggravated cases of disease could be readily appended hereto, but we feel assured that they would add but little to the strong and respectable evidence here given by persons competent to judge of the merits of these remedial agents.

HERE IS YOUR REMEDY!

Holloway's Ointment.

A Most Maraculous cure of Bad Legs, after 43 years' suffering.

Extract of a Letter from Mr Wm. Galphin, of 70, St. Mary's street.

Weymouth, dated May 15th, 1851,

To Professor HOLLOWAY,

SIR,—At the age of 18 my wife (who is now 61) caught a violent cold, which settled in her legs, and ever since that time they have been more or less sores and greatly inflamed. Her agonies were distracting, and for months together she was deprived entirely of rest and sleep. Every remedy that medical men advised was tried but without effect; her health suffered severely, and the state of her legs was terrible. I had often read your Advertisements, and advised her to try your Pills, and Ointment; and, as a last resource, after every other remedy had proved useless, she consented to do so. She commenced six weeks ago, and, strange to relete, is now in good health. Her legs are painless, without seam or scar, and her sleep sound and undisturbed. Could you have witnessed the suffering of my wife during the last 43 years, and contrast them with her present enjoyment of health, you would indeed feel delighted in having been the means of so greatly alleviating the sufferings of a fellow-creature.

(Signed) WM. GALPIN.

A PERSON 70 YEARS OLD CURED OF A BAD LEG, OF 30 YEARS STANDING

Copy of a Letter from Wm. Abbs, Builder of Gass Ovens, of Rushcliffe, near Huddersfield May 31st 1851.

To Professor HOLLOWAY,

SIR,—I suffered for a period of thirty years from a bad leg, the result of two or 3 different accidents at Gas Works; accompanied by scorbutic symptoms.—I had recourse to a variety of medical advice, without deriving any benefit, and was even told that the leg must be amputated, yet, in opposition to that opinion, your Pills and Ointment have effected a complete cure in so short a time, that few who had not witnessed it would credit the fact.

(Signed) WILLIAM ABBS.

The truth of this statement can be varified by Mr. W. P. England, Chemist, 13, Market St., Huddersfield.

A DREADFUL BAD BREAST CURED IN ONE MONTH.

Extratt of a Letter from Mr. Frederick Turner of Penshurst, Kent, dated Dec. 13th, 1850.

To Professor HOLLOWAY.

DEAR SIR,—My wife had suffered from Bad Breasts for more than six months, and during the whole period had the best medical attendance, but all to no use. Having before healed an awful wound in my own leg by your unrivalled medicine, I determined again to use your Pills and Ointment, and therefore gave them a trial in her case, and fortunate it was I did so, for in less than a month a perfect cure was effected, and the benefit that various other branches of my family have derived from their use is really astonishing. I now strongly recommend them to all my friends.

(Signed) FRED TURNER.

The Pills should be used conjointly with the Ointment in most of the following cases.

Bad Legs, Chilblains, Fistulas, Sore-throats, Bad Breasts, Chilblains, Gout, Skin-diseases, Burns, Chapped hands, Glandular Swellings, Scurvy, Bunions, Corns (soft) Lumbago, Sore-heads, Bite of Moscetoes, and Sand Flies, Cancers, Piles, Tumours, Contracted, and Rheumatism, Ulcers, Stiff Joints, Scalds, Wounds, Coco-bay, Elephantiasis, Sore Nipples, Yaws, &c.

Sold at the Establishment of Professor HOLLOWAY, 241, Strand, (near Temple bar, London), and by all respectable Druggists and dealers in Medicines throughout the British Empire, and of those of the United States, in Pots at 37½c. 87c., and $1,50c. each.
