

Where are They. I came to the place of my youth, and said of the friends of my youth, where are they And echo answered, where are they,

Ah! ne'er was heard a voice of gladness Respond to love's brief 'where are they,' It only wakes from chords of sadness The mournful echo-where are they. Tis sorrowful to call in thought To those who now may answer not.

To stand where those we love have stood, To clasp their favourite flowret's stem, To glance o'er hill and sky and flood, In the same spot that circled them: Each brings their memory hovering near, But list her voice-'They are not here.'

Nay more, a dusky mist of doubt Comes ever waving wood and stream, And flings a shade above to flount The affluence of the summer's beam, And sky and wood and waters say In thrilling silence-where are they.

The thorn trees that we fondly treasure, And keep alive its sympathy, Memento of some hour of pleasure, Or tale and date of misery, Of whom it speaks will only say To sad remembrance- where are they."

Yet, why should I such word repeat, 'Tis echoed sadly o'er again! Though touch'd on some remembered sweet One chord will vibrate to the strain: Tis sorrow to call in thought To those who now may answer not.
