Jackson did calculate, conditionally, upon a majority in the Centreville District, and I believe made their calculations about as accurately as Mr. Chambers the great master did. think his assurances were, that Mr. Adams was to get a majority in this district, of from forty to fifty. This opinion was mournfully expressed upon the emptying of the ballot box, when it was found that the majority was only from eight to sixteen. But this is all What difference does it make whether we were accurate in our calculations or not? Of one thing we are certain, that by the vote of the honest freemen of this coun ty, JACKSON is their choice. The writer himself feels this, and in the distress of his heart, calls upon the People to pause and consider before they give their vote to Gen. Jackson -because say, he, he is a murderer, &c. I wonder he did not refer to the coffin Aand-bills and the forged documents from Congress, to prove his assertions. It has been a matter of speculation among some unlearned men, how a wise man in the Senate of the United States, on a solemn vote, should in the year 1818, have acquitted General Jackson of crimes, which he now urges against him at Cross Roads and Brick Stores It has been conjectured by some men, that a certain Senator may have had a political object in view in his vote in 1818. There may have been policy in dividing the political house. There may have been & Facure Defence" in "reserve." Deep politicians adopt deep manouvres.

It has been surmised by some men, that a Politician from Talbot, would make a very respectable minstrel. He sings the tale of the "militia-men" very well in prose, but 'tis thought he would greatly excel in EXPOSITOR.

To John Tillotson, a knight of the order of Don Quixotte, and a defender of the faith of his majesty king John II.

Worthy Sir-Among all the writers that ever appeared in the Gazette, you pre-eminently excel. You are, Sir, a second Daniel, I mean a second Solomon. There you shine like the moon among the lesser stars. Or to give it a smack of the sublime, which is the character of your own style, your eloquence shines like the meridian sun off a mud puddle!! With these introductory remarks, I mean now to obviate, repel, and destroy, all the charges against you, I mean, Sir, one or two out of many. And first they say that you occupied a column or two, in noticing four numbers of Duff Green's paper. In reply to this I would remark, that all sablime writers like you and myself, could write a volume about nothing. Your mind and mine are as capacious as a crockery warehouse. The next charge is that no body can understand what you write. But in reply to this I would observe, that all writers like you and myself, have not time to run to every one with our manuscript, and say, do you understand this, or do you? No, sir, we shall write high prose, low prose, and prose run mad just as we please.

The next charge is that like a spaniel, or grey hound, you thurst your snout into every pot. I know, sir, you participate a little of the spirit of Paul Pry, but so is every writer in prose run mad. Another charge is, that at a recent congressional election, you endeavoured to as-- sail a highly respectable citizen of Talbot, 3567 and that as a solitary individual in Talbot would not believe your word, you appeared Miller before a Caroline Justice of the Peace, and 175 swore to your communication. He has a right to fo ge, not on 5201 an anvil, but in his own black breast, I say he 4128 has a right to forge, make or say, what he 42321 pleases. As your word, however, is below 4266 par, in this county, and I am sprry to say it, I advise you to get, make, and collect, all ter in the Gazette of the 11th inst. you can against Sangton, and come over to 4566 Talhot, and I will swear whatever you say, 4607 against Sangston. For off his pumps we 4298 must have him by hook or crook, or to 4167 speak like a seamen, we must put him on his beam ends. I intend my Dear knight, in my next, to repel a few more of the charges 4310 which are afloat against you. I am, Sir, 4535 your loving brother.
