The American Farmer makes the following comparison between nules and horses .- First. A good mule on a farm will do as much work as a horse while he retains his strength. But a mule will last, on the average, twice us long as a horse. The horse liable as he is to disease is rarely fit for effective service after he has been employed for 12 years; while a mule wil as frequently, wear for 24. Secondly. There is a great difference between the quality an quantity of food required by both animals. the herse must be more or less supplied with grain during the whole year, or he will become tain and unfit for hard labor; while the mule can subsist in summer on grass alone; and winter when not worked, can feed on hay thout losing his health and strength.-From four to eight ears of Indian corn at each meal. are sufficient for a mule when regularly work cit; while a horse will eat nearly double the quantity. Thirdly. A mule need not be shod oftener than once a year, during the season of ice; while the horses requires shoeing four times: making a saving on the farrier's bill alone of $2 624 a year for each animal. observes further, that from actual experiment the total expense of feeding and shoeing a horse annually, is found to be forty-four dollars, where a mule will cost but twenty two.

in the year 1693, as follows: A brig from Madagascar, on her way to England, came to anchor off Sullivan's Island. Tho. Smith, going on board, received from the Captain a bag of seed Rice, with information of its culture in the East, its suitableness for food, and its incredible increase. Smith divided the seed among his friends, and an experiment being made in different soils, the success surpassed the expec-'ation the Captain had excited. Thus, from this small beginning, accidentally occurring, arose the staple commodity of Carolina, which soon became the chief support of the colony and the great source of its opulence.-Ral. Re-
