Women as Well as Men are Made Miserable by Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh, or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also a pamphlet telling all about Swamp-Root, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers who found Swamp-Root to be just the remedy needed. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

When they heard that Lieutenant Cavanaugh, —th United States cavalry, was coming home on a month's leave of absence a general alarm was sounded, and they met in secret session for conference and action.

They were all openly and avowedly suitors for the lily white hand of Helene Kemble, and now they formed an alliance for the purpose of keeping the trespasser from their territory.

It was conceded generally that the odds would be in favor of an army officer, and, though they gathered solace from the fact that he never brought a mount with him, they realized that obstacles must be placed in his path.

The first fruits of their common cause against the enemy were seen at Mrs. Dalrymple's lawn fete, which occurred on the night of Lieutenant Cavanaugh's return to his home city.

Helene was talking to a little knot of friends when she saw her hostess approaching with a tall, square shouldered, good looking man. She prepared complacently to meet the young officer whose merits so often had been rehearsed to her. Before they reached her, however, one of her admirers quickly came up to her and bore her away to the dancing pavilion.

"WHAT AUDACITY!" SHE THOUGHT, TURNING TO GIVE HIM A GLANCE.

After the waltz was ended she saw the lieutenant approaching again in company with his aunt, whom Helene knew slightly.

Another suitor interposed at once, hurrying her to a table with such haste as to bewilder her. This program was followed the rest of the evening. Whenever Cavanaugh was seen in her vicinity some one was sure to intervene and whisk her away. She knew chance was not entirely to blame, and at last she divined and enjoyed the situation. She wondered if Cavanaugh was equally wise.

"If he has the diplomacy one in the service of Uncle Sam should have," she thought, "he will find a way or make one."

Once during a dance the young officer collided with her partner, and she felt confident that the action was intentional. As he begged her pardon his partner started to give the desired introduction. Instantly the man with Helene danced her away in double quick time. After this dance Cavanaugh took his departure.

"He hasn't what George designates as staying powers," she concluded.

Two days passed without any apparent effort on Cavanaugh's part to effect a meeting.

"He is either stupid or indifferent," she concluded, slightly piqued.

She changed her mind when she received from his aunt an invitation to a small dinner to be given for the young lieutenant.

"That was a shrewd move," she mused. "I wonder what he would do if I should not accept the invitation?"

A spirit of contrariness seized her. She determined to prolong the situation. She sent her regrets as to the dinner, pleading indisposition. The fib forced her to remain indoors throughout twenty-four beautiful hours. It made her illogically indignant against the man, of course.

On the following day she took her first riding lesson, accompanied by a riding master and her younger brother, George. As they rode three abreast Lieutenant Cavanaugh, mounted on a shining chestnut, approached. To Helene's utter surprise he wheeled about and rode at her side.

"What audacity!" she thought, turning to give him a glance meant to be annihilating. Her frigidity was wasted. The young lieutenant was not even looking at her. With flushed face and set features he was concentrating his whole attention on his horse. After a sharp trot they came to a corner, and with a sharp cut of his whip the lieutenant turned and vanished down a side street.

"How dared he!" she wondered. "If I hadn't shown by my manner what I thought of him I actually believe he would have spoken to me."

They turned at the next corner. To her dismay she saw him in the distance ahead of them. Angry as she was at his behavior, she could not help noticing that he was riding superbly.

"Let us ride faster!" she suggested.

They passed Cavanaugh at a gallop.

Instantly he rode with them again, but this time alongside of George. Cavanaugh said something to the boy and, again putting the whip to his horse, rode on. The lad reined up and gave vent to wholesome and hilarious mirth.

"What did he say to you?" demanded Helene indignantly.

"Oh, say, Helene, this is rich! He borrowed that horse of Jim Hunt, and you know Jim is a member of our troop of state cavalry."

"Well, what of that?" she asked unenlightened.

"Why, that horse is used to drilling fours, and Cavanaugh had hard work to convince him he wasn't on duty."

"Really?" said Helene relenting.

"Let me show you," said the lad eagerly. "I am trumpeter for the troop, you know, and I brought my trumpet with me to practice in the woods. Let's overtake him, and I will show you."

They urged their horses forward. The boy rose in his saddle and sounded the recall. Cavanaugh's horse responded instantly and swiftly.

"Lieutenant Cavanaugh," said the boy naively as the chestnut swung into line, "let me introduce you to my sister, Miss Kemble."

The young lieutenant acknowledged the introduction gravely and then explained the ways of his horse.

"Don't you think, Lieutenant Cavanaugh," she said sweetly, "that it would be a pity to interfere with the military training of your horse? If your way lies on this road, why not continue in fours?"

"It would be a kindness alike to horse and rider," he replied.

"I had exhausted," he said presently when they were back in the city, "all my knowledge of maneuvers and tactics, and it remained for Hunt's mare to help me out. I don't think it was her training alone that prompted the movement. I really suspect that she had grasped the situation and wanted to help me out."

"Suppose," she proposed innocently, "that we ride past the club."

"The charge of the light brigade against the enemy," he laughed.

George was discreetly silent, and the "combine" never was able to fathom the secret of the encounter. But they all got over it in time to appear at the wedding next year.

A Famous Penman.

In a little log cabin in the village of Geneva, O., Platt R. Spencer, the author of Spencerian penmanship, first taught writing. The school was familiarly known as "Jericho" and is fresh in the minds of hundreds of successful men and women in many parts of the United States.

Platt R. Spencer spent the first penny he ever earned as a lad for a sheet of writing paper. He sent by a lumberman to a distant town for it and sat up into the night awaiting his return. Later, at Ashtabula harbor, he wrote the beautiful Spencerian characters, of which he was the author, in the sands on the shores of Lake Erie, and still later, while employed on a small vessel going in and out of the same port, he wrote upon the framework of the cabin at odd moments. He often walked miles to borrow a book and retraced the distance on foot to return it promptly.

When he became a teacher himself, after overcoming many obstacles and hardships, he had little patience with the scholar that would waste his time, but he would stay hours after school to assist the willing pupils. The little log school thus became famous for the successful men and women who received their education under this great man. Spencer was born in 1800 and died in 1864. Besides being a penman and educator he was a poet.—American Boy.

The Elephant's Sense.

Why an elephant should be afraid of a mouse is a mystery. Some have doubted the generosity of the elephant because of his aversion to small animals, but none can doubt his intelligence. Buffon, notwithstanding his idea of the mere mechanism of animals, spoke of the elephant as at the same time a "miracle of intelligence and a monster of matter." Ernest Menault happily referred to him as the animal that carried his nose in his hand; hence the marvelous intelligence of his trunk. The senses of touch and smell co-operate. The nerves which extend through his trunk are so numerous that they equal in number all those distributed over the rest of the body. The elephant can keep perfect time to music. He has the ear perfectly organized, and the hearing is extremely fine. The eye of the elephant is distinguished from that of other animals by the pathetic expression of sentiment. Take him all in all, naturalists agree that he is the most intelligent of animals. And why should he be afraid of a mouse?—Exchange.

Not For Him.

"Mean thing!" exclaimed Mrs. Newlywed. "It's just brutal of you to call it 'this stuff.' You said you'd be glad if I baked my own bread"—

"Yes, dear," replied the great brute, "but I didn't say I wanted you to bake mine."—Catholic Standard and Times.

They Often Do.

"The host is not dancing this dance."

"Neither is the hostess."

"They're quarreling it out," explained an observant guest.—Washington Herald.
