ROCK FISH TOO MUCH FOR CAT.

Piscatorial Story Vouched For By Veracious Port Deposit Men.

Port Deposit, Md., Sept. 3.—A curious sight was witnessed yesterday morning by a few men just north of Canal Station, near here. It was a head-on collision between a full-grown, strong, fish-hungry cat named Tab and owned by Samuel Reeves, of Beattes, and a voracious rock fish.

The swollen Susquehanna had left pools in the grass bottoms at Canal and Tab went fishing. It is the habit of rock and bass when rivers are at a high stage to take refuge in these bottoms and search for food until the waters recede. Tab had evidently learned this fact in the school of experience. Taking a position at the edge of the water he idly swung his tail and blinked his eyes when a perch just his size swam toward him.

Tab, over anxious, sprang with open mouth to meet his dinner. He got the dinner all right, but just at that instant a rock fish estimated at 15 or 20 pounds saw the perch and it looked good to him. The rock fish always has the right of road in the Susquehanna, so the rock went fullspeed ahead with his 10-inch mouth wide open.

When the fish sighted the cat it was too late to swerve or to close the mouth and puss' headpeace was taken in.

Without a moment's hesitation—so the witnesses aver—the rock reversed his gear and backed into deep water, the last evidence of the struggle seen being the distress signals of the cat's tail and the churning of the fish's caudal appendage.

The spectators when asked for the story refused to speak until all were present, and then only on condition that no names be used. They feel that this particular cat will not come back.
