ANOTHER WOMAN CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Black Duck, Minn.—"About a year ago I wrote you that I was sick and could not do any of my housework. My sickness was called Retroflexion When I would sit down I felt as if I could not get up. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and did just as you told me and now I am perfectly cured, and have a big baby boy."—

Mrs. ANNA ANDERSON, Box 19, Black Duck, Minn.

Consider This Advice.

No woman should submit to a surgical operation, which may mean death, until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made exclusively from roots and herbs, a fair trial.

This famous medicine for women has for thirty years proved to be the most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cures female ills, and creates radiant, buoyant female health. If you are ill, for your own sake as well as those you love, give it a trial.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

JEFFERSON'S PICTURES.

A Wonderful Landscape Painted Entirely From Imagination.

Marvelous were the products of Jefferson's inspiration. He had created a school of his own. He was prone to portray forest scenes, with tree trunks of wonderful size, in accurate military formation. Old mills were a favorite subject with him, especially old mills with water wheels, and in some of his paintings he actually accomplished the impossible, for to all intents and purposes he succeeded in making the water run uphill. This having been called to his attention by an overcritical friend, Mr. Jefferson responded that he was well pleased with the result, for "few men could have accomplished it."

When president of the Players club, a position he held for so many years before his death, Mr. Jefferson presented to the club a large canvas of his own. If the writer remembers correctly, there was a pond in the foreground, with rushes, a tumbledown house and a large and rather theatrical looking forest, all painted, the artist boasted, in the dead of winter in his own sitting room and entirely from his imagination. When it was first displayed on the walls—for of course none of the old gentleman's gifts was ever refused—it attracted much attention, and one day Mr. Jefferson, being in the club, seized a brother member, who happened to be a man whose pictures had on more than one occasion won prizes in the salon, and stood him before his own masterpiece. "Now, I want you to tell me," he said frankly, with his childlike and delightful smile, "what you think of it."

"Well," replied the painter, responding to the pressure on his arm, "I'd like to have one hung as well as that." And the old gentleman was delighted.

During his lifetime that picture remained in its prominent position, and whenever Mr. Jefferson entered the club he would manage to maneuver himself in front of it, regarding it from all sides and angles, and hardly ever did a picture receive so much praise and so little criticism as that marvelous landscape.—James Barnes in Bookman.

EQUATORIAL AFRICA.

Three Things a White Person Must Have to Live There.

Without a mosquito bar a white person would be unable to live on the equator, writes Ida Vera Simonton in the Delineator.

No matter how hot and stifling the night—and no other place can be so stifling as the equatorial African night during the long rainy season in the midst of the jungle—one must sleep under a closely tucked in mosquito bar, not the ventilated kind civilization knows, but one of closely woven stuff through which no air circulates.

When the mosquito bar was let down it took in almost the entire room, but it proved especially useful in sickness and convalescence. It permitted existence free from insect bites. As malaria is the white man's most insidious foe and comes from the bite of the mosquito, every precaution must be taken against it. Three things are absolutely necessary in Africa—a mosquito bar, a water filter and quinine.

The bed was made by a native carpenter. The frame was of wood, the slats of bamboo ribs fitted closely together with the pith side uppermost. They didn't give a bit and were an excellent dancing floor for the dried plantain leaves which made the mattress. The leaves were confined beneath ticking tacked to the four sides of the bed, but they matted easily, and every night it was continuous leaf turning for me. The bamboo was slippery, and insomnia kept me and the leaves on the move, so that most of the time I slept on a hard surface. My pillow was of dried sweet smelling grass. Whoever says that hard beds are beautifiers should sleep upon an African bed.

Gold Heated Water.

Over 4,000 years ago an elaborate system of filtration was established by the Egyptians to purify the waters of the Nile. In both Rome and Athens hot water was drunk in preference to cold by the small minority who used water for drinking purposes. Champier, writing in 1560, notes that the habit of drinking hot water was spreading among all classes in France. "Some warm it by holding it over the fire. Others dip burning bread into it. Rich people plunge a bar of hot gold into their water before drinking it, and the less wealthy a bar of hot iron, while the very poor are content to warm their drink with a live coal."

Got His Number.

Uncle Zeph had had some trouble getting about on the cars and complained of the employees. "When a conductor is uncivil to you take his number," said his nephew.

Two days later uncle came in somewhat battered, but looking triumphant. "I got the number," he said, with a satisfied air, "but I had to grab the hull cap too."—Buffalo Express.

Had a Proxy.

"Have a drink, old man?"

"No; I've cut it out."

"Aw, be sociable."

"Well, my companion here will take a drink with you. He's my social secretary."—Kansas City Journal.

Entirely Capable.

"Is your new maid capable?"

"Yes, indeed. She can tell callers I don't want to see that I'm out and make them believe it."—Detroit Free Press
