CHESTERTOWN, MARYLAND.

MESSRS EDITORS:

Allow me space in your columns to refute statement made against the present superintendent of the Maryland House of Correction that are entirely unfounded and for causes best known to his accusers. When he took charge of the institution the statement he made to us was one of kindness and only what any sensible and sympathetic one could make. He told us that discipline was the paramount necessity for an institution of this character and while he should expect it, and must have it, he wanted it from a standpoint of mutuality; he wanted to be our friend and wanted us to be his friends. He wanted to act toward us as an employer who could and would appreciate a common sentiment to the welfare of both. Two facts were very prominent the first day of his regeme, and that was a very sanitary improvement in food and vessels from which it was served. Another was the condition of the cells and corridors—a very marked and acceptable one to me, and I may add to all. No inmate of the institution can say aught of the sentiment expressed, that from effort on his part and ours should make our incarceration here as agreeable as conditions would permit. He spoke of the expense that the tax-payers of the State had to assume under a careless and inefficient management and while his aims were not tyrannical, he was bound by duty to make it redown to his and our credit, and while his management has only been of two weeks duration, any one who can fathom its career can only see that it is fair, just and honorable. I know no grounds for censure from his accusers, but I can truthfully and with all frankness state that they are false and cannot be substantiated by proof. No man doing penalty for cause or injustice can but appreciate such a feeling from the manager. He stated that he was not responsible for our being here, sorry we were, but at the same time it was a fact and as such he had a duty to perform, and so had we, and he hoped it would be one of mutual feeling. Cast to the forewinds of earth such accusations and false misrepresentations and give to a man who deserves it credit and honor due. I am human and can detect the tyrant as speedily as any one (without being egotistical (that the management of the Maryland House of Correction can only be conducted successfully by just such a course. The management is perfectly ignorant of the course I am pursuing and I am not trying to gain any favor as I have only two weeks more to remain here. It is only to refute statements made against a man who is honorable, just, fair and capable and will show results to the public and inmates of this institution.
