THE MONKEY-A FABLE.

BY GEORGE HUMPHREYS. A man who own'd a barber's shop At York, and shav'd full many a fop, A monkey kept for their amusement;

He made no other kind of use on't-

This monkey took great observation, Was wonderful at imitation, And all be saw the barber do, He mimic'd straight, and did it too. It chanc'd in shop, the dog and cat, While friseur din'd, demurely sat, Jacko found naught to play the knave in, CARDS, &C., So thought he'd try his hand at shaving. Around the shop in haste he rushes, And gets the razors, soap, and brushes;

As badly here again succeeding, The dog runs howling round, and bleeding. Nor yet was tir'd our roguish elf;

He rubs with soap his visage sable, Then with left hand holds smooth his jaw, -The razor in his dexter paw; He cock'd, to shave beneath his ehin; Drew razor swift as he could pu'l it, And cut, from ear to ear, his gullet.
