WORRY WEARS OUT THE HUMAN SYSTEM

Consider the automobile. When the car is going to stand still for more than a few minutes the driver stops the engine. By doing this he saves gasoline, oil, and above all, useless wear and tear on the machinery. If he lets the engine "run idle" he has wasted a lot of valuable material, shortened the life of his engine, and in the meantime the automobile hasn't budged an inch.

The birds build nests for the protection of their young against the weather; the foxes dig holes for security against foes; the squirrels lay by stores of nuts against the coming of winter, and dogs bury bones against the day when bones will be scarce. These are the manifestations of a normal protective instinct arising from an experience of many, many generations. So far as is known, though, no bird ever tried to build more nests than his neighbor; no fox ever fretted because he had only one hole in which to hide; no squirrel ever died of anxiety lest he should not lay by enough nuts for two winters instead of for one, and no dog ever lost any sleep over the fact that he didn't have enough bones laid aside to provide for his declining years.

The protective instinct is also present in the human mind, and when properly directed is a great source of prosperity both to the individual and the nation. In order for man to store up and lay by, to gain advancement, either in honor or material things, it is necessary that he take some forethought of the morrow, but just so soon as he carries this beyond the normal point the mental process becomes an exaggerated and abnormal one. The normal protective instinct is stimulated by a normal fear of those events which are reasonably sure to happen in the future unless means are adopted against them. The moment that this fear becomes abnormal or exaggerated it over-stimulates this protective instinct and to no good purpose because it results in worry. This worry continues long after the necessity for the normal stimulus of fear has passed, with the result that there is an impairment in mental power and a dissipation of the nervous forces. In other words, the mental engine has been "running idle" and at the same time delivering no propulsive power. In fact, worry is an abnormal state.

***

Not all worry is preventable, but for the most part it can be avoided. Most of our fears are never realized, and as a rule, if we meet our troubles day by day as they come without worrying about them before they arrive or fretting over them after they have passed, we will find that we have the strength to rise above them. Worry undermines the health to a certain extent. It really weakens the mental forces by tiring them out by doing nothing. Usually the relief from worry rests with the victim of this unhappy habit himself, but sometimes the real causes are not the ones which seem to explain the condition, and we must go deep into our lives or have the assistance of those who are skilled in unraveling mental processes.

***

The best antidote for worry is a change of mental occupation, a getting away from the scenes which provoke worry, exercise in the open air, a good book, a pleasant recreation, or a temporary change of occupation. As a matter of mental health every sufferer from this unfortunate condition owes it to himself to discover some simple means of getting away from this habit which is destructive to health and peace of mind alike.

GOOD CHANCE FOR THE ONE-HORSE FARMER

"What hope is there for a one-horse farmer, if any?" asks a reader. It all depends on the kind of man he is. While having only one work animal is a handicap, there are worse. For instance, we'd rather risk making a paying crop with one mule on rich land than to try it on poor land with a dozen mules. Peas, beans and the clovers can be grown as well by the one horse farmer as by the larger, and crop rotations that will build up the land are just as possible with the small fellow. Get out of the one horse class as soon as you can, of course; but the mere fact that you are a one-horse farmer by no means shuts the door of hope. One of the most successful farmers, we know, a man rated at $300,000 started thirty years ago with a single gray mare and an unlimited supply of spunk. Yes, the one-horse farmer has a chance, and a good one.—The Progressive Farmer.

WEALTHY MAIL-CARRIER

Amassed a Fortune But Held On To His Job.

Although he had amassed a fortune by investments in real estate which increased rapidly in value, Martin L. Henry clung to his job as a mailcarrier along East Seventy-second street, New York, at a salary of $1,200 a year. He entered the service in 1882, when he was 30 years old.

Henry committed suicide Sunday by inhaling illuminating gas, leaving a note in which he said: "I am tired of life." He was reputed to be worth $300,000 and was said to be probably the wealthiest active letter-carrier in the country.

He lived frugally and saved a little money at first. Then he received tips on profitable stock speculations from wealthy men to whom he delivered mail. He soon abandoned Wall Street, however, and began buying real estate in the borough of the Bronx. It was this which gave him his fortune.

Some time ago Henry fell and injured his head while looking over some of his property. Since then, his family said he had been ill mentally and physically

THE Alumni, old students and friends of Western Maryland College will hold their mid-winter banquet in the Palm Room of the Hotel Emerson, Baltimore, Md., on Friday evening, February 9th. This is the Golden Jubilee year of the college, the Charter having been issued in 1867. About 5500 students have been enrolled in this time and this mid-winter banquet held in Baltimore, as a more central point, draws together not only the old students from Baltimore, but from all portions of the State and other localities. After the most attractive menu the Emerson can offer there will be enthusiastic speechmaking, college reminiscences and college songs. J. W. Smith of the Western Maryland R. R. is president of the Alumni Association and the committee in charge of the banquet consists of L. Irving Pollitt, Chairman; Dr. C. Alfred Shreeve, Secretary; J. Bibb Mills, Treasurer; Burdette P. Webster, Henry Gilligan, Judge Wm. H. Forsythe, William G. Baker, J. Samuel J. Turner, George Dexter, Harry L. Gilbert, Rev. A. Norman Ward and W. R. McDaniel.
