Hendlers Is Worlds First Automatic Ice Cream Plant

The most modern ice cream plant in the world is located in Baltimore, owned and operated by local capital. This institution is the Hendler Creamery Company, which occupies the 1100 block East Baltimore street.

The buildings cover five acres of floor space; 7,500 quarts of ice cream are frozen each hour; a herd of 7,500 milk cows would be required to supply the cream and milk used in the manufacture of the ice cream; the daily refrigeration capacity is 325 tons; 300,000 quarts of fresh fruits are used annually, 1,500,000 pounds of sugar are consumed yearly; and the fifty trucks operated by the company have an annual delivery mileage of 500,000 miles, or enough to encircle the earth at its greatest diameter twenty times.

Hendler was the first company to design and install an automatic plant; for from the moment that the cream is delivered to the plant until it is sent to the dispenser of ice cream, it is never touched by hands. Even the filling is done automatically by a machine perfected by this company.

Although the company has a complete ice manufacturing plant with a capacity of 100 tons a day, which has in the past been used to supply Hendler customers with ice for maintaining the ice cream in perfect condition, it is soon to be discontinued as obsolete. The reason for this is that the company is installing Nizer electric refrigerators for all dealers using Hendler's ice cream.

Thousands of visitors, particularly school children and their teachers, visit the plant each year, and are cheerfully shown through the entire establishment, a guide willingly explaining the entire operation of manufacturing ice cream.

The process of manufacturing Hendler's ice cream, which is undoubtedly Nature's finest food in its finest form, can be briefly summarized as follows:

The raw cream is handled by automatic conveyors leading from the receiving platform to the third floor mixing tanks, where it is formulated to their standard and then flows thru nickel silver pipe lines to the glass lined pasteurizers.

After the pasteurizers have received their supply of cream, pure cane sugar is added from an over-hanging bin (this bin holds 10,000 pounds of sugar) and the entire mix is pasteurized and homogenized. By this last process is meant the breaking up of the fat globules in the cream, so that it will freeze evenly.

By pasteurization is meant the holding of the cream at a temperature of 145 degrees for about 30 minutes, after which it is quickly cooled to a temperature of 38 degree Fahrenheit. It is then held under a uniform temperature for freezing in large glass-lined tanks, with a capacity of 40,000 quarts.

The cream flowing from the cooling tank enters a battery of freezers producing 7,500 quarts of ice cream per hour and empties directly into automatic fillers, being conveyed by gravity to the hardening room, which has a capacity of 40,000 gallons.

The company maintains a complete laboratory, under the constant supervision of two analysts and bacteriologist.

The fleet of fifty cars for delivering the cream represent an investment of about $250,000. A complete garage is provided for care of these cars; every one of which is rebuilt every year.

The Hendler ice cream plant is practically a self-maintaining institution, doing all of its own repair work, even having a wood-working shop for the purpose.

The organization of the company is an admirable one, having 175 highly skilled employees.

For the accommodation of civic organizations, luncheon clubs and the like, the establishment maintains a large auditorium in its main building. This room may be had free by any group that wishes to hold a meeting there.

HALT JUNK YARD ON DIVISION STREET

Board Of Zoning Appeals Refuse Permite When Citizens Protest

WILL ALSO FIGHT DRUID HILL GARAGE

Residents Of 1500 Block, Form Petition To Keep Out Concern

Protests of residents before the Board of Zoning Appeals last Tuesday caused the Board to refuse a permit for the use of a driveway at 2116 Division street for trucks hauling junk to and from a junk-yard at that address, owned by the Central Metal and Rubber company.

The case was presented to the Board of Zoning Appeals by Attorney Gobert E. Macbeth who placed on the stand Mrs. Jennie Ross who owns a home and resides in the neighborhood. R. Maurice Moss, secretary of the Urban League, was also called to the stand to give expert testimony in the case. Several other residents of the block were present at the hearing.

The junk shop which faces on Brunt street in the 2100 block runs through to Division street. On the Division street side there is a small shack and a driveway, now closed by gate. The owner of the junk yard, through his attorney applied to the Inspector of Buildings for permission to use the driveway entering Division street. The Building Inspector refused to grant the permit and the owner carried the case to the Board of Zoning Appeals. The action of the Board on last Tuesday in upholding the action of the Building Inspector settles the case permanently.

Some time ago the owner of the yard applied for permission to open the shack on Division street as the office of the Central Metal and Rubber Company, hoping thus to face his business on Division street. Residents of the block, under the leadership of John Goldsborough and Mrs. Ross retained Attorney Macbeth and protested the use of the property facing Division street. Mr. Moss also testified in this case and the Board of Zoning Appeals refused to allow the use of the shack.

The present attempt of the Central Metal and Rubber Company to open up the driveway onto Division street would have had, had it been successful, the effect of giving the company a Division street facing. It was this attempt to turn a residential district into a business district that the residents protested.

Mr. Moss was examined at length by members of the Appeal Board. He testified as to the effects on property when such undesirable businesses are allowed to invade residential districts. Basing his statements on studies made in this city by the Urban League and the social work official pointed out the dangers to children, to health and morals that the invasions of a respectable colored neighborhood by such businesses would bring. Charts showing crime and disease records in neighborhoods where such invasions have taken place were exhibited to the Board.

Druid Hill Garage

Residents of the 1500 block of Druid Hill avenue have also circulated a petition to prevent the establishing of a garage for which a permit is sought by a white man in that section.

The fight is being led by Attorney Roy S. Bond, who is a resident in that block. It is set out in the petition that a garage will ruin the block as a residential block and it is believed that the permit will be refused.

IDENTIFICATION IS FAULTY, MAN FREED

Alexander Beckum, 22, was dismissed by Magistrate Johannson in the Northwestern Police Station, Sunday morning, on charges of assault brought against him by William Ames, 1105 Calhoun street.

Beckum was accused by Ames of having attacked him on the street late Saturday night and stabbed him in the neck without explanation. Ames told the Magistrate that he was on his way home when someone unknown hailed him and without ceremony stabbed him in the neck. Ames notified a policeman just at the moment Beckum came down the street. Ames declared that there was the man who had attacked him and the latter was placed under arrest.

Beckum established an alibi and it was found that Ames was under the influence of liquor at the time of the assault.

Boy Sustains Broken Leg

While playing ball in the street on Carrollton avenue and Winchester street, Wenchel Johnson, 1135 N. Carrollton avenue, was struck by an auto Thursday. The car was operated by Benjamin Houghey, white, 4214 Reisterstown Road, who removed the boy to the Colonial Hospital, where he was found to have sustained a broken leg.

Baltimore Has A Chinatown Too, Afro Reporter Learns

Manufacturers, Importers and Doctors Among Orientals Who Dwell In Small Space Here

By RALPH MATTHEWS

While on his tour of California and the coast Dean Pickens wrote a lovely article about the Chinese and their customs. Has Baltimore a Chinatown, I asked and set out to answer it. The answer is, yes. Come with me to Mulberry street, walk from Howard to Park avenue, down Park avenue to Saratoga street cut through to Ivy Alley and High Alley and there you will find the bulk of the little yellow men in Baltimore.

On Mulberry between the first mentioned streets the following establishments are located. To the left is Wing Lee Wad and Co., and next to that is the meeting house of the Kuo Min Fang, which is the Baltimore branch of the Chinese Nationalist Party. On the right Hop Lung Wah Kee, is a manufacturer of Noodles and Kung Wo Chong and Co., are importers of high grade teas. Just above Dea Faung is an importer of Oriental goods. Some of his rare antiques are prized among the thousands. And as I write these names a very crafty little celestial is watching me suspiciously and I am going away from here just as fast as I can.

To get the low down chinatown is no easy matter as the chinaman keeps his own counsel and if he could be induced to talk I couldn't understand him anyway. I'll visit John C. Leitner in the Custom House, he is a narcotic agent and ought to know about these gentlemen if anybody does.

The Chinese of Baltimore are from all appearances very law abiding, as no trouble, as far as dispensing dope has come from that section for more than two years, Mr. Lietner declared. Doubtless, he declared, many of them "drag" the opium pipe in the quiet of their homes but as far as distributing narcotics to outsiders is concerned, there has been no complaint. The average Celestial does not indulge in morphine and the kind of drugs that have become a menace among Americans in recent years, he said.

The Hip Sings and the On Leongs are the two known Tongs existing in Baltimore. There has been no trouble out of the factions, however, since the Tong war which resulted in the death of many here about a year ago. During my visits to the various courts I have noticed a mysterious gentleman known as "Dr. Wu", a bona fide medical doctor and Hopkins man, who always appears from somewhere whenever one of his brothers get into conflict with the law. He acts as interpreter and general adviser. No case goes on until Dr. Wu arrives as he most inevitably does.

The loosely fitting jacket and baggy trousers worn by the average Chinese laundryman are seldom seen unless you visit the rear of the Mulberry street homes. These gentlemen, importers for the most part, dress like the American business man. The high cheek bones and scrawny figure is replaced by fat oval faces with short, stout bodies. The dried red duck, stacks of spagetti and piles of rice so picturesque of New York Chinatown, are seldom seen here. Women and children are rare.

There is a lesson to learn from these men. They are industrious, mind their own business and stick together. Traits worth copying by any race.

In The Public Schools

CORNERSTONE LAID FOR NEW SCHOOL

Mayor Jackson Reiterates His Promise Of A Square Deal For All

PRESTON STREET IS SOON TO BE WIDENED

Park Is Planned. Supervisor's Office and "Gym" In New Building

Cornerstone of school 122, the new elementary school building, Preston street, between Druid Hill and Pennsylvania avenues, was laid Friday.

Supervisor Francis M. Wood, presided and addresses were made by Mayor Jackson, William L. Rawles, president of the School Board, J. Barry Mahool, former mayor and chairman of the school committee of the Public Improvement Commission, and Dr. David E. Weglein, superintendent of public schools, while William Norris, president of the Park Board, Mrs. Marie O. H. Baurenschmidt, of the Public School Association Mrs. Laura D. Wheatley, of the Parent-Teacher Federation were asked for brief remarks.

The Mayor in his address reminded the audience how it was said of him in the last campaign that if he, a Democrat, were elected the new high school would not be completed and that the colored people could look for no more new school buildings.

The laying of the cornerstone of this building, he said, indicates his stand for the square deal and his intention to serve all the people of the city.

Mayor Jackson in his address said that he had signed on Thursday a measure widening Preston St., from Druid Hill avenue to the new school.

President Rawls of the School Board backed up the Mayor's stand for a square deal, in the building of new schools.

Former Mayor Mahool declared that the new building would cost $300,000 and the land $167,000. Despite the fact that residents in the adjoining streets were so close that they could look down on the exercises, Mr. Mahool declared that he hoped the time would soon come when the Park Board would remove those nearby dwellings and create a park around the school building.

David E. Weglein, superintendent of schools, said that a new building meant new opportunity and new responsibility. The new structure, he said, will contain 18 class rooms accommodating 800 pupils. There will be a gymnasium, an assembly hall, rest room for teachers and three times as many shops for industrial work as in any other school of its size.

In fact the new school, says Superintendent Weglein will act as an industrial center and pupils of other nearby schools will come here for shop work.

It will be so built that additions can be made to the original unit without serious handicap to the present light and ventilating system. Original plans, said Dr. Weglein, call for the placing of the supervisor's office in the new building. Later he declared this matter not officially settled but is yet under discussion.

Some Assaults Are Justified

When is an assault not an assault? Magistrate O'Neil answered it in the Northeastern police station Thursday in the case of Miss Marie Custon, 1513 E. Fayette street vs. Miss Nettie Scott, 716 W. Franklin street.

Mis Custon informed the Magistrate that the other young woman knocked her down and she displayed a very bruised face which she declared was the result of the fall.

"Well," said the Magistrate, "she mussed you pretty badly. What was the cause?"

"It was over a man, your Honor."

"Just as I surmised," said the Magistrate. "Now, young lady, tell me why you so brutally attacked this girl."

"Yes I admit it was over a man but not in the way you think. You see this girl and her fellow had an argument and he knocked her down first. She ran in my house for protection and when he called her she started to go out to him to get another beating. It made me angry, Judge, to think she was so dumb and I just smacked her down myself. But those black eyes, Judge, her boy friend gave her those."

"Dismissed," said the Magistrate.

Percy Jewett Had Many Lines

Percy Jewitt, 243 McCulloh street, talked himself into the Northwestern Police Station, Saturday.

Prior to landing in the jailhouse, Percy was very busy, most too busy. He stopped a man in the 400 block of Laurens street and offered him a job of $75 per week. After Percy had held him up for nearly a half an hour, during which he talked incessantly, the man got an idea that Percy was off his nut and notified a patrolman.

The officer followed the trail and learned from first this one and that of Percy's actions. He tried to sell life insurance to one, convert another and interest a third in a pamphlet he was writing by divine inspiration. He was at last found coming out of the home of Attorney Roy S. Bond. How he got in, what his mission was and how he got out was a puzzle to both the police and Attorney Bond.

The magistrate ruled that talking was not a disturbance of the peace and freed Jewett. Advising his friends, however, to keep an eye peeled for future outbreaks.

Bootleg Still On Rampage

Bang! Bang! Bang! Three successive blast disturbed the early morning peace of the residents of the 400 block of Dover street. Frantically many tumbled from their beds in their night clothes, quite certain that some desperate gangsters had discharged an infernal machine and that their roofs would soon be tumbling down about their very ears.

Those who rushed to the street were greeted by a shower of falling bricks, cross bars and glass as the whole side of the house at 718 Dover street was wrecked by the blast. Consternation reigned in the street. Mothers huddled their babes close to their breasts, the hearts of strong men stopped for a second, girls were hysterical. Then came the fire, the rear of the house was gutted by the blaze that threatened the whole block.

Firemen, who arrived on the scene, after getting the flames under control, unearthed among the debris, 20 barrels of mash, which stood as a fitting tribute to the success of Prohibition, and the remains of a 100 gallon still, which, left unwatched during the night, had exploded. As yet no one has said, good morning judge, but police are looking for the two men who ran from the house just preceeding the explosion.
