CUPID IN HOSPITAL WARDS

Nurses at the Front Have Their Romances Much as Do Their Sisters in Civil Life.

"There came to my notice while visiting the hospitals on the French front an incident that illustrates the spirit of the troops," remarked Dr. H. J. Bryan, an American physician, who spent several months at the front. "Too much praise cannot be given the young women who have gone from the United States and Canada to 'do their bit,' and, you may believe me, the British and French soldiers are grateful.

"A Canadian nurse, a beautiful girl, was in charge of one of the wards at Estaples. It was Christmas time, and the young woman had worked unceasingly to make the room as attractive as possible that the poor fellows lying on their cots might have a bit of the Christmas spirit. All the time she was attending to her duties as a nurse. She had put the last touch on the Christmas decorations, had seen that her convalescents were comfortable, and in the early morning, weary from hours of constant vigil, she confided to one of her 'boys' that she was very tired and would rest.

"An hour later the nurse returned, and to her surprise she found a one-legged hero hopping around the room making up the beds. He had just finished the last one when the nurse entered. Her duty, of course, was to scold, but the pathetic face of the wounded soldier, turned upon her with a look of supreme satisfaction, melted the words on her lips, and, womanlike, she burst into tears. This young woman afterward married a Scotch officer whom she had nursed, and the happy pair are living in Dorset, in England."

New York's Mental Defectives.

There are 30,000 mental defectives in New York state and it will take $12,500,000 adequately to provide for them, says the state board of charities in its fiftieth annual report. But 6,749 of these defectives are in asylums or other institutions and of this number the state has accommodations for 5,000 but more than 1,000 more are crowded into the shelter of the wards.

The board says it is getting appeals every day from orphan asylums, school authorities, poor law officials and courts begging for proper places in which to keep feeble-minded children who need custodial care.

The sum of $2,000,000 is asked for the completion of the Letchworth village colony, near New York city, to increase the capacity from 300 inmates to 3,000 inmates.

The annual appropriation of $2,500,000 is urged until the state has built up its asylum capacity. The board in nine months of the last fiscal year received $2,530,333 for state institutions with 11,392 inmates, and expended $2,493,141, of which $742,349 was for buildings and improvements. The private institutions under public supervision, with 3,298 inmates, got from public sources $693,362, from private sources $484,908 and spent $1,133,654.

Thoughts Mold Character.

Learn to think carlessly and deeds in kind will soon follow. Remember what you think enters into the molding of your charcter. Men who permit the mind to dwell on the sensuous soon find themselves on the way to ruin. Men with high ideals and determinations move steadily upward. Somehow the world just makes way for them. In this busy old world you just must keep going. What the mind dwells on most will determine the direction and speed at which you go. You must think in terms of vision. See the great and aim to realize it. Even if the thing is beyond your present reach, the fact that you try fits you for the good you are bound to come to later if you keep trying. You must think well of yourself also. That's part of the program. Unless you can respect yourself as a workman you will have trouble commanding the respect of others. Be particular about your thinking.—Exchange.

Ant Cows.

Ants are frequently noted on roses and on other ornamental and garden plants, and it is naturally supposed that they are doing harm to these. As a matter of fact, it is not the plants that attract the ants, but plant lice. These tiny creatures excrete a sweet liquid of which ants are very fond and which they collect without injuring the plant lice. For this reason plant lice are frequently termed "ant cows." The analogy is emphasized by the fact that ants have been known to take plant lice into their nests, shelter them through the winter and return them to suitable plants in the spring, very much as men are accustomed to feed and shelter cows throughout the winter, putting them on pasture with the coming of the spring.

Clearing the Trenches.

Perhaps the hardest thing to learn is to clear the enemy's trenches after a foothold has been gained in a portion of it. This is where the hand-to-hand fighting comes in and it is the work of the grenadiers, seconded by the grenade bearers. They must advance from embrasure to embrasure ten yards ahead of them into the next section of trench and drive the enemy back along the trench or down into the dugouts. As they move forward, they must clear the dugouts, throwing grenades down the steep stairs, often twenty to thirty yards underground, then descending into the pitchy blackness to send their grenades searching into every corner of the dugout, not to leave an effective enemy behind them.
