"I have used Pyrox this season against bugs and blight. It certainly does the trick with the bugs, and for blight, I don't think Pyrox can be beaten."

Such is the experience of Mr. E. R. Dissinger, Campbelltown, Pa., who ends his letter by saying—"I certainly would not do without Pyrox when growing potatoes."

No Fruit or potato grower can afford to overlook Pyrox. The fact that it serves two purposes is not a mere chance—but the result of scientifically uniting powerful insecticides and fungicides—thus making the one application do the work of two.

Order of Publication

Jacob E. Mason versus Dorothy M. Mason.

In the Circuit Court for Kent County, in Equity. No. 2020.

THE object of the Bill filed in the above entitled case is to procure a Divorce, "a vinculo matrimonii," for the Plaintiff, a resident of Kent county, Maryland, from the Defendant.

The Bill states:

1st. That on the 17th day of September, 1917, he filed a Bill of Complaint in this cause against his wife, Dorothy M. Mason asking that he be divorced a vinculo matrimonii from his said wife, Dorothy M. Mason.

2nd. That he alleged in said Bill of Complaint that the said Dorothy M. Mason had lived in the State of Pennsylvania, but at the time of the filing of the Bill of Complaint she was temporarily residing in Kent county, State of Maryland, and therefore prayed that the writ of subpoena be directed to the said Dorothy M. Mason commanding her to be and appear in this Court at some certain day to be named therein and answer the premises and perform such decree as may be passed therein.

3rd. That before the Sheriff could serve said subpoena upon the said Dorothy M. Mason she departed from the State of Maryland, and has since been living in the State of Pennsylvania; and therefore the Sheriff has been unable to effect service of said summons upon her.

4th. At the time of the filing of the Bill of Complaint your Petitioner failed to pray this Honorable Court to grant the Order of Publication, giving notice to the said Dorothy M. Mason of the object and substance of the Bill of Complaint and warning her to appear in this Court either in person or by solicitor, on or before a certain day named therein, to show cause, if any she has, why a decree ought not to pass as prayed.

It is thereupon this 28th day of May, A. D. 1918, ordered by the Circuit Court for Kent county, in Equity, that the Plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in said Kent county once in each of four successive weeks before the 1st day of July next, giving notice to the said Dorothy M. Mason, non-resident Defendant, warning her to appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 18th day of July next, to show cause, if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

Examinations will also be conducted by the College Entrance Examination Board Monday-Saturday, June 17-22, in Gilman Hall, beginning at 9 a. m. These examinations are accepted by the University.

APPLICATIONS FOR SCHOLARSHIPS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING, established under the provisions of the Laws of Maryland, Chapter 90, 1912, will now be received. MEASURES TAKEN TO PREVENT LOSS

Inspectors Detect Diseased Vegetables and Fruit Arriving at Destination.

COUNTY AGENT IS NOTIFIED

Selling Value of Inferior Product Is Decreased When Arriving on Market—Steps Taken to Combat Various Disorders.

To check the loss from plant diseases in shipments—which also means a loss of time, labor, material, and transportation—the food products inspectors of the bureau of markets stationed in most of the large receiving centers now keep close watch for plant diseases on fruits and vegetables arriving on the markets.

Bad Product Not Wanted.

Diseased fruits and vegetables are not wanted in the markets any more than on the farm, and when carlot shipments arrive showing evidence of plant diseases their selling value is decreased even if none of the produce must be thrown away. Sometimes, in the case of very perishable crops, like berries or lettuce, there are serious losses of food because the shipments carried plant diseases when loaded. While no shipper would knowingly load badly infected fruits or vegetables, such produce may reach the markets in poor condition because the disease was present when loaded and developed in transit. This is especially true where shipments are made without providing proper ventilation or refrigeration.

Steps to Combat Disease.

Whenever shipments of produce suffering from plant diseases arrive the inspectors immediately notify the shipper, and through the pathologists of the department of agriculture the county agent in the locality where the diseased shipment originated is instructed to take steps to combat the disease.

Although the inspection service has been in operation only a few months as a part of the general inspection work of the department in certifying to shippers the condition of carlot shipments as they arrive at markets, already it has resulted in the detection of diseases in many shipments, and has aided growers and plant pathologists of the department in controlling the outbreaks of diseases and preventing their spreading to other sections of the country.

Shortage of Harvest Labor.

Of all the agricultural labor problems confronting the farmers of the country at this time, probably the most serious is that of getting enough help to harvest the wheat crop. In normal times there was a shifting population of from 30,000 to 50,000 men who followed the harvest season from the South to the North of the wheat belt. Floating labor is no longer available to any such great extent, and the matter of harvest labor, always a problem, is now a more serious one. Mr. E. E. Frizell, the department of agriculture's farm help specialist for Kansas, recently wrote: "After full and complete investigation, I am free to say that the farmers of Kansas will not be able to save the wheat crop unless they can get help from some of the surrounding states." What is true of Kansas is probably true of most of the other wheat states. The department of agriculture and the department of labor, with fairly adequate funds available, are using their best efforts to solve the problem, which they undoubtedly will do. But the city people of the states involved, by proper organization and co-operation, can help a great deal. If they care at all for more wheat bread and less war bread during the next 12 months, they will help a great deal. If their patriotism is at all manifest, not to say militant, they will help a great deal. For the nation to mature a wheat crop and then fail to harvest it would be exactly as bad policy as for the government to mobilize and train an army and then poison it.

PLANT FOOD DISEASES

You know something of how the United States department of Agriculture protects America's 100,000,000 consumers against diseased animal products.

Do you know that the department is just as vigilant in protecting the same consumers against diseased vegetable products?

That, anyhow, is true.

But do not be too conceited over what the department is doing for you.

The department is interested in the consumer as an individual—in his personal welfare, in seeing that he has good, wholesome foods.

But it is also interested in the population en masse—in seeing that everybody gets ENOUGH food.

Diseased vegetable products, of course, are not good for the individual. But there is another element. When vegetables are allowed to become diseased, in transit or otherwise, and have to be thrown away, the total supply of available food is reduced by just that much, and somebody has to do some more scrimping.

Those are the two reasons why the United States department of agriculture devotes a good deal of attention to protecting vegetable foods against diseases found at markets.

To Aid Man Power.

Prof. G. I. Christie, assistant to Secretary of Agriculture Houston, recently pointed out some striking illustrations of how the available labor supply could be used to much better advantage if supplemented by machinery; of how some labor is not fully utilized because machinery is not used. On one farm in the corn belt he saw two strong men, each with a team of horses and a single moldboard plow, following each other around the field. On an adjoining farm a seventeen-year-old boy, driving four horses to a two-furrow plow, was doing as much and better work. On one farm two men with two horses to a wagon were spreading manure with forks. On an adjoining farm one man with three horses to a manure spreader was accomplishing a larger amount of work in a more efficient way. For lack of proper machinery the labor of one of the men plowing and one of the men scattering manure was thrown away. Professor Christie points out that during the rest of the season farmers can handle their work with a materially reduced number of men if they avail themselves of such things as the double cutaway harrow, wide cutter bar of mower and binder, sheaf carrier on the grain harvester, tractor, haying tools, milking machine.

Your County Agent.

Do not forget that there is a sort of deputy secretary of agriculture who is always ready to help you with your poultry problems. He is the farm demonstrator for the United States department of agriculture. He is commonly known as "the county agent." If there are young people in your household he would no doubt like to enroll them in the clubs for poultry raising which are carried on in most of the states. He is a good man to get in touch with—and to keep in touch with.

Thorough cultivation in the garden is of much greater value than artificial watering.
