A Christmas Tree

By Charles Dickens

I have been looking on this evening at a merry company of children assembled round that pretty French toy, a Christmas tree. The tree was planted on the middle of a great round table and towered high above their heads. It was brilliantly lighted by a multitude of little tapers and everywhere sparkled and glittered with bright objects. There were rosy-cheeked dolls hiding behind the green leaves, and there were real watches (with movable hands, at least, and an endless capacity for being wound up) dangling from innumerable twigs. There were French polished tables, chairs, bedsteads, wardrobes, eight-day clocks and various other articles of domestic furniture (wonderfully made in tin at Wolverhampton) perched among the boughs, as if in preparation for some fairy housekeeping.

There were jolly, broad-faced little men, much more agreeable in appearance than many real men, and no wonder, for their heads took off and showed them to be full of sugar plums. There were fiddles and drums. There were tambourines, books, workboxes, paint boxes, peep show boxes, sweetmeat boxes and all kinds of boxes.

There were trinkets for the older girls, far brighter than any grownup gold and jewels. There were baskets and pincushions in all devices. There were guns, swords and banners, real fruit, made artificially dazzling with gold leaf; imitation apples, pears and walnuts, crammed with surprises. In short, as a pretty child before me delightedly whispered to another pretty child, her bosom friend, "There was everything, and more."

CHRISTMAS OF LONG AGO

Poignant Pangs Come Instead of Peace, as Season Causes Thoughts of the Past.

Christmas, singularly enough for a festival that is supposed to celebrate joy, is characterized by sadness. The time of year, which is supposed to be fraught with good cheer, is laden with pain. Instead of peace, there are experienced poignant pangs.

Nor is it cynicism which says so; the average man in the street will tell you the same. Neither is crabbed age sponsor for the crotchets of the time; unless, indeed, crabbed age begins in this hurried era when a man passes his majority. Nor is the tragic contrast between the cloud, which now for the fifth Christmas darkens Europe and the world, and the bright star of Bethlehem the reason for the somber tone that sounds beneath the gay notes of the season, as the deep diapason of the organ rolls beneath the rippling melody. No; it is none of these things which imparts to Christmas the somberness which is apparent to everybody who has passed into years of maturity.

It's memory that does it. Memory plays tricks with us on these days. Perhaps more than on any other holiday our minds revert to Christmases that used to be. We like to think about it; we like to read the Christmas Carol, because it puts in everlasting words the emotion of gladness which used to dominate that day. No matter how humble the home, memory paints it in wonderful colors on this one day, from the time we jumped from the warm bed long before dawn and scampered across the cold floor to get the stocking which somehow had been stuffed during the night, to the end of the plethoric home festival, when, candy-smeared and filled to the point of repletion we were rescued from the wreck of toys and packed wearily off to sleep, more or less troubled with painful suggestions of turkey and mince pie.

There is only one thing that can make Christmas real to a grown-up, and that is to do something for somebody who cannot pay it back. That otherism is, we begin to suspect, the thing which dominated the Christmases that used to be and made them so real that they remain warm in memory. Unless you would have memory become a dry specter, you yourself must make real for little children of the now the pictures which memory conjures up for you of the Christmases that used to be.—Saturday Globe.

A Repeated Message.

Every year Christmas repeats its message: "Fear God no more. He brings liberty to the enslaved, light to the despairing, purer joy to the glad. He is the Comforter of the sorrowing, the Physician of the sick, the Healer of the sinful, the Friend and Companion of man.—Wilbur D. Nesbit.

COUNTY BOY SHOT THROUGH BREAST

Dudley N. Skinner, of Near Millington, Tells How It Felt When He Was Shot By A German Soldier—Is Now Recovering.

How he was shot down by a German soldier; the sensations experienced after the bullet pierced his body, and how he crawled to a first aid station and was latter removed to a base hospital for treatment, is told by Private Dudley N. Skinner, of Company K, 148th Infantry in France, in a letter to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mordecai Skinner, of near Millington. The letter was written on November 17th, and was received by his parents last week. It was the first intimation they had of their son's condition:

In his letter Private Skinner says: "Mother, I have bad news to tell you, but it could be lots worse. The last battle front I was on and last battle I was in gave me this bad news. It was the morning of October 31st at fifteen minutes before six o'clock while I was on the battle field when a dirty Hun aimed his rifle at me and a second later the bullet hit me. I will never forget that minute the longest day I live. I shook like a leaf and then fell to the ground. As I fell I thought I was taking my last look at this world. In a few minutes I realized I was not killed, and as luck would have it, I was not hurt so badly but what I managed to crawl to a place where there were men to dress the wounds of soldiers. After my wound was dressed I was sent to a hospital and they found the bullet.

"The Hun bullet struck me in the right breast and passed through my body, stopping just above my right kidney. The surgeons took the bullet from my back. It was lucky that I was hit where I was, instead of where the Hun intended.

"Mother, I don't want you to worry because I have been wounded. It might have happened for the best, because if he had not of hit me, some other dirty Hun might have hit me and put me out of the way for good.

"But, as it is, I will not be a cripple and there are thousands of others with only one leg or arm, my wound is realy lucky. I will get over in a short while and the best of it is I don't think I will have any more fighting to do. I hope not, for I have seen enough."

What is the difference between an OCULIST and an OPTOMETRIST?

The Oculist treats diseased eyes and fits glasses according to the laws of optics. The Optometrist uses the same means for detecting any disease, but does not treat, but refers to the Oculist or family Physician. The Optometrist fits glasses according to the laws of optics just the same as the Oculist, but without drugs or drops.
