At the annual conference which convened recently in Raleigh, N.C., Rev. Mr. Gant was given an appointment at Graham, N.C., where he and his bride will make their home.

Booker T's "Grape Vine" Scout Dies

Alexander R. Stewart, as His Confidential Aide, Would Sound Whites.

ARRANGED TALKS IN LYNCH COMMUNITIES

Filled Post From 1904 Till Washington's Death.

By ALBON L. HOLSEY

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala (ANP)—Just before the kick-off of the home-coming game at Tuskegee, the large crowd which filled the grandstand and bleachers in the Alumni Bowl stood silent for a brief period, with heads bowed, in tribute to Alexander Robert Stewart.

Capt. Stewart, as he was known to thousands of Tuskegee students, former students, graduates, teachers and friends, had, two days before, completed his long and memorable stroke.

His passing revives memories and discussion of the remarkable role of planning and service of men which so conspicuously marked the life of Booker T. Washington.

Was Confidential Aide

From 1904, when Capt. Stewart was appointed to Tuskegee Institute, until 1915, when Dr. Washington died, he served as his confidential aide and personal business manager for Tuskegee's founder.

As such, his work was not of the kind which found its way into the columns of newspapers. It was, however, none the less important and necessary.

Too few people in our own race know of the instances of real courage and heroism which Dr. Washington displayed in his efforts to soften the intensity of race prejudice in the South.

Through that remarkable system of the "grape vine" telephone, he kept in close touch with the leaders of the white and black people. When word came to him that white people in some community were particularly hostile to colored education, it was to that community he would plan to make an address.

Arranged Talk by Washington

It was here that Capt. Stewart did most important work for his chief. Into this community Stewart would go to find one or two representative and friendly white people and one or two colored people in whom the white people had confidence.

Capt. Stewart would then approach them and by whatever means the circumstances proposed he would skillfully suggest that an invitation be extended to Dr. Washington to come and make an address.

Hostility Outwitted

After the invitation was extended and accepted, Capt. Stewart, on one pretext or another, would spend much time in that community prior to the coming of Dr. Washington, in order to "spot" and measure the opposition, and guide the "committee on arrangements" in selecting a suitable place and in planning to get out the crowd, both white and colored.

Frequently, W. M. Rakestraw, white, Tuskegee Institute agent; T. M. Campbell, farm demonstration agent, or some other worker close to Dr. Washington, would alternately supplement or operate in getting an accurate index of the temper of the community.

With this confidential information in advance, Dr. Washington would be able to prepare his address to get to the hostile whites and to set in motion by his magic words a subtle reaction which would tend to lessen the opposition to colored progress or to increase the number of white friends for the race.

Stewart's Role Important

While such meetings were ostensibly arranged to uplift the colored people of that prejudice-ridden community, their real purpose was to reach the ignorant, poor whites who, out of curiosity, would come to "see what they can do in a doin."

It is a matter of common knowledge at Tuskegee that many such meetings were arranged in or near a community involving a revolting lynching. It is, therefore, of importance to record the work of Capt. Stewart in helping others to properly setting the stage for these meetings which were important and epochal occasions.

The methods they employed in doing this delicate and secret service work is a chapter in Tuskegee's history yet to be written.
