A Rose-Colored Statement.

Miss Jane Addams, the brilliant head of Hull House, said at a luncheon of the Chicago Civic Club:

"We women have still much to fight for. Our battle will be long and difficult. Well, let us frankly admit it. There is nothing to be gained by such rose-colored phrases as William White employed.

"William White's brother had killed a man in cold blood.

"'Well, William, how about your brother?' a visitor to the town asked him one day after the trial.

"'Well,' said William, 'they've put him in jail for a month.'

"'That's rather a light sentence for a cold-blooded murder,' said the gentleman.

"'Yes, sir,' William admitted, 'but at the month's end they're going to hang him.'"

Emerson and Intellect.

There are some who rank faith as the highest of human faculties; there are others who worship moral or esthetic beauty; but for Emerson the ultimate word was mind. "God, or pure mind," is one of his phrases, incidental but revealing. "He may talk of other gods," Mr. W. C. Brownell, the eminent critic, remarks; "his Zeus is intellect. The hand may be Isaiah's, the voice is that of the intelligence. 'The capital secret of the preacher's profession,' he says, 'is to convert life into truth.' These five words define his own work in the world with precision. And his instrument, his alembic, for this conversion was the intellect."

Both the strength and the weakness of Emerson, as Mr. Brownell interprets him in a recent penetrating essay in Scribner's, may be traced to his deification of mind. His eagle keenness of mental vision enabled him to pierce the universe to its very marrow, but he paid for his power in "a corresponding deficiency in susceptibility."—Current Literature.

Was Doing Her Best.

William Pruette, the singer, tells of a servant girl who came to Mrs. Pruette in tears and asked permission to go home for a few days. She had a telegram saying her mother was sick.

"Certainly you may go," said Mrs. Pruette, "only don't stay longer than is necessary, as we need you."

A week passed, and not a word from her. Then came a note which read:

"Dear Miss Pruette i will be back nex week an plese kep my place for my mother is dying as fast as she can."—Success.

Too Much Luxury.

A man who had been three times married and as often left a widower was reported to be thinking a fourth time of entering into the blessed and comfortable estate of holy matrimony.

"Na, na; what wi' mairryin' them, and what wi' buryin' them, it's ower expensive."—Answers.

How She Identified Twins.

The Beverly twins, Fred and Frank, were such exact counterparts of each other that none of the neighbors could tell them apart and even their mother sometimes had her doubts. The resemblance is accentuated by the fact that they are dressed exactly alike.

"How in the world can you yourself tell which is which, Mrs. Beverly?" asked a caller one day.

"To tell the truth," she answered, "I can't always; but if I hear a noise in the pantry and I call out, 'Fred, is that you?' and he says, 'Yes, mamma,' I know it's Frank, and that he's in some kind of mischief."—Youth's Companion.

GARDEN, FARM and CROPS

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE UP-TO-DATE AGRICULTURIST

Pigs On Pasture.

Pigs do very well on pasture, but they will make more rapid gain if they are allowed some mill feed in the form of a slop and a little shelled corn soaked. Charcoal is a good corrector for hogs at this season of the year that are being forced for market. Try charring corn cobs.—Farmers' Home Journal.

Balanced Ration.

The farmer is in a position to furnish a well balanced ration without buying high priced patent foods. We might mention that clean, fresh water, oyster shell, grit, commercial beef scraps and dry bran, should at all times be before them. This, with a variety of grains, constitute in a great measure, their bill of fare. It makes winter seem like summer, when you have mangel wortzels, turnips, cabbage and potatoes for them.—Farmers' Home Journal.

Hog House—Cement Floors.

I see Mr. H. Talbert, of Shelby county, Ind., wants some inforamtion about his hog house floor. I would advise him by all means to use the cement for a floor. I have used one for two years and find it convenient to clean out and your brood sows can't root down in a hole. You should clean it out quite often as it accumulates dust and put in fresh bedding.

I think Mr. Talbert is making his hog house too narrow. I would advise him to make it 24x36 and have a 5 foot crib at the north, a 10 foot driveway and feeding room, 3 foot alley and 6 foot brood sow nests. I built a wall and filled it with clay tamping it solid except what I wanted for cement.—A. J. Logan in the Indiana Farmer.

Age Of Dams.

The age of dams exerts but little influence on the quality of foals. Many examples of great sires are on record whose dams were 3-year-old fillies. Other examples are numerous where aged dams produced noted sires and show horses. The problem of breeding depends on the selection of a sire that will overcome any defect in the disposition or conformation of the dam. Great foals are also produced by the harmonious blending of blood and speed lines in ancestors. Conformation is easier to establish in a breed than improvement in speed. The art of breeding includes the methodical selection of stallions whose conformation and speed lines will harmonize in the dam to produce a fixed type of individuality and inclination to improve in speed and show attribute.—Indiana Farmer.

Dairy Cow Ration.

A dairyman with much experience contributes to the Canadian Farmer some good suggestions on the dairy cow daily ration, and says:

A good ration for a dairy cow giving a fair flow of milk should contain about 29 pounds of dry matter; 2.5 pounds of protein; 12 pounds starchy feed or carbohydrates; and one-half pound of fat. All these figures represent the amounts digestible in the feeds. The proteids should be in the feed at the rate of one of protein to about 5.5 of starchy matter.

Figuring on this basis the following ration of feeds grown on the farm will be found to give good results: Corn silage 30 pounds, alfalfa hay 10 pounds, oat straw 5 pounds, ground oats 5 pounds, and ground peas 4 pounds. This will give a nutritive ratio of 1.58 or in other words there will be one pound of proteids for every 5.8 pounds of starchy foods.

Farmer and Incubator.

Reports from all over the country go to show that there is a big shortage in the crop of chickens being raised this season. There are, doubtless, several causes for this shortage, one being the extreme high price of food grains during the past six months or more and another is the extremely favorable prices obtained by the farmers for market eggs during the months of April, May and June. Here in northern Illinois the price of eggs usually drops during these months to 10, 12 or 14 cents, while this season for only a week or ten days did the price go below 20 cents.

Undoubtedly many farmers or farmers wives (who usually have the care and the proceeds of the fowls) reasoned that it would be good policy to cut down the number of eggs set and instead sell them at the unusually high prices and at the same time keep the hens all, or nearly all, busy laying these high priced eggs. There could be but one result, and that, the shortage in the crop that is now so apparent.

But suppose the incubator had been in use by these same farmers, what would have been the result? Then not only the most of the hens could have been kept busy producing 20 cent eggs and better, during April and May, but all of them, and at the same time the usual number, or more, of chicks could have been hatched and with much less time and trouble than was given to the few hens that were set. Owning and operating one or more incubators is simply a good business proposition for any farmer in this country and thousands of Tribune readers can testify to that effect this season. Other thousands, we believe, will realize the benefit and provide themselves with incubators before another hatching season comes on. They will be needed more than ever in the spring of 1910, for the reason that the short crop of chickens raised this year means a big shrinkage in the supply of eggs during the coming winter and spring and still higher prices than were obtained during the past season. Twenty-five cent eggs on the farms of the middle west next April and May would not not surprise us in the least.—Poultry Tribune.

Care of Farm Implements.

Farm implements like all other implements have a time when there is no use for them. This time of inactivity is as hard on them as when in use, if they are not properly cared for.

All implements should be run under cover temporarily when not in use. It often happens, for example, that the corn planter may be idle for a few days. It should be run in the dry away from the hot sun, and so with all other implements.

No implement should ever be put away for the winter until the owner is sure that it is in good shape for the next season's work. If any repair is needed, see to this before the implement is housed. Having all the implements in good repair before they are needed the next season will very probably save time, money and expense.

It pays for every farmer to own a vise and die and tap and to keep a good supply of bolts on hand. Then when a bolt is lost or broken he can cut the threads and fit it without much loss of time. The loss of a bolt on any piece of machinery throws a greater strain on the other parts, so that a little extra pressure, a jerk, or a twist causes a break, which means a trip to the blacksmith, causing delay and expense.

Of course the farmer who is fortunate enough and able to own a large shed for his machinery can run his different implements in it and leave them until needed again. Housing of the farm machinery for such a farmer is a problem easily solved. But the farmer who has scarcely room enough to shelter all his live stock is in a different position. To such a farmer it is often quite a task to find room for his binder, if he has one. But of all implements take care of the binder for it is expensive and is used only a short time each year, and then we are always in a hurry and want it to do good work. By taking off the reel and bundle carrier the space necessary for it may be lessened.

Probably the worst implement to put away, and for this reason the one most often left out in the weather, is the hay rake. Room for it may be found somewhere in the barn if the wheels and tongue are taken off and the teeth hung up out of the way. Plows and harrows can very often be put in the buggy shed.

The plows, the cultivator shovels, and runners to the corn planter should be greased with axle grease to keep them from rusting. It gives a farmer a pleasant feeling of satisfaction to know that his implements are all under shelter, and not rusting and rotting out by exposure to all kinds of weather.—L. R. O., in the Indiana Farmer.

Farm Notes.

It is poor economy to try to save money by having the horse imperfectly shod.

When the timothy crowds the clover entirely out the following crops of timothy are usually very large.

If the pullets have not commenced to make comb they should be especially fed so as to hasten maturity.

Timothy and clover mixed makes good hay because the timothy holds the clover up and the curing is easier.

Look out for bad habits in your colts. It is so much easier to keep them out than it is to get rid of them if they once get a hold on the young horse.

If you have a hoggish hog in your herd, put him by himself. If left with the others he will only make a hog of himself and keep the others from doing likewise.

All good farmers watch the condition of their colts when put into winter quarters. A colt allowed to lose its colt flesh and become thin, will never make the horse he would if kept growing from the start.

If disease breaks out in a herd, confine it to as small an area as possible. When the trouble is over, plow up; clean up; disinfect the premises and wait a year before putting more hogs on the same area.

Do not expect too much from young sows; the second litter is usually better than the first. The breeder should have in his mind the picture of the animal he wishes to produce. He is then going ahead and not moving in a circle.

Incorrigible.

He asked so many questions that day that he finally wore out his mother's patience.

"Robert," she cried, "if you ask me another question I shall put you to bed without your supper!"

Robert promptly asked another and was packed off to bed. Later his mother repented. After all, asking questions was the only way he could acquire knowledge; so she tiptoed upstairs, knelt beside Robert's bed and told him she was sorry.

"Now, dear," she said, "if you want to ask one more question before you go to sleep, ask it now and I will try to answer."

Robert thought for a moment, then said:

"Mother, how far can a cat spit?"—Success.

Herbert Gladstone's Bull.

Herbert Gladstone, who, it is understood, has been offered the post of Governor General of United South Africa, was once guilty of an amusing bull in debate on the question of disestablishment.

Dilating on the hold on the affections of the people by the Church of England, he said: "When an Englishman wants to get married to whom does he go? To the parish priest. When he wants to get his child baptized to whom does he go? To the parish priest. When he wants to get buried, to whom does he go?"

The house answered with a roar of laughter, in which Mr. Gladstone himself joined, adding: "As I was contrasting the English church with the Irish, a bull is, perhaps, excusable.—Toronto Globe.

Maine Checker Maker.

It seems inconceivable that two men can be kept steadily employed the year round making checkers. Yet that is what is done in a mill at Bethel. The average output of checkers from this mill is 800 barrels. It has been as high as 1,000 and down to 600, but 800 is the average. This does not sound very large, but when the figures are worked out it is found to be a lot. In every barrel shipped there are 30,000 checkers of the ordinary size, while in 800 barrels there are 28,800,000 or 1,200,000 sets of 24 checkers each. That is to say, with the output of this Maine mill, 2,400,000 persons could be playing at the same time.—Kennebec Journal.

HARD TO DROP
But Many Drop It.

A young Calif. wife talks about coffee:

"It was hard to drop Mocha and Java and give Postum a trial, but my nerves were so shattered that I was a nervous wreck and of course that means all kinds of ails.

"At first I thought bicycle riding caused it and I gave it up, but my condition remained unchanged. I did not want to acknowledge coffee caused the trouble, for I was very fond of it. At that time a friend came to live with us, and I noticed that after he had been with us a week he would not drink his coffee any more. I asked him the reason. He replied, 'I have not had a headache since I left off drinking coffee, some months ago, till last week, when I began again, here at your table. I don't see how anyone can like coffee, anyway, after drinking Postum!'

"I said nothing, but at once ordered a package of Postum. That was five months ago, and we have drank no coffee since, except on two occasions when we had company, and the result each time was that my husband could not sleep, but lay awake and tossed and talked half the night. We were convinced that coffee caused his suffering, so he returned to Postum, convinced that coffee was an enemy, instead of a friend, and he is troubled no more by insomnia.

"I, myself, have gained 8 pounds in weight, and my nerves have ceased to quiver. It seems so easy now to quit coffee that caused our aches and ails and take up Postum."

"If there was one thing the family dog disliked it was milkmen," said Jerry F. George, of Pittsburg, Pa. "Wherefore the old milkman was wary and never ventured in without first tapping on the kitchen window to find out for certain that all was safe.

"But the new milkman didn't know about the pets, peculiarities, so when Fido was eventually detached from the fleshiest part of the new milkman's calf by the master of the house the victim of the onslaught began to express his mind with considerable freedom.

"'Keepin' a dog like that!' he indignantly exclaimed.

"'He's only playful, that's all,' insisted the fond master, and pressed something into the new milkman's hand.

"The milkman glanced at the coin and then deposited it in a safe pocket.

Scratched So She Could Not Sleep.

"I write to tell you how thankful I am for the wonderful Cuticura Remedies. My little niece had eczema for five years and when her mother died I took care of the child. It was all over her face and body, also on her head. She scratched so that she could not sleep nights. I used Cuticura Soap to wash her with and then applied Cuticura Ointment. I did not use quite half the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, together with Cuticura Resolvent, when you could see a change and they cured her nicely. Now she is eleven years old and has never been bothered with eczema since. My friends think it is just great the way the baby was cured by Cuticura. I send you a picture taken when she was about 18 months old.
