Miss Misc

BY H. LAWRENCE FREEMAN

Charlotte Wallace Murray and Clyde Barrie Head

NEW YORK.

The third annual New Year classic concert of the Harlem branch of the Young Men's Christian Association presented that distinguished artist, Charlotte Wallace Murray, mezzo-soprano, and Clyde Barrie, radio baritone, in the auditorium of the Harriet Beecher Stowe Junior High School, recently.

Mrs. Murray disclosed an artistry that was distinctive. The strides that she has made in a few years is little less than marvelous.

Here is a voice of exceeding richness and sonority, imbued with a wealth of power, that easily penetrates the farthest recess of any auditorium, and at the same time, impresses the listener with the assurance of power held in reserve.

Her voice and artistry place her on par with many Metropolitan Grand Opera stars.

Her numbers included classics by Purcell, Sibelius, Wolf, and Richard Strauss, and "The Grey Wolf" by Burleigh, and "On Ma Journey" by Boshner.

Clyde Barrie

Mr. Barrie is not a great singer, because he does not possess a great voice. Its quality is of sufficient attractiveness to warrant the interpretation of works that particularly demand a smooth tone progression—mostly of a pervert, romantic nature.

The aria, Hear Me, Ye Winds and Waves, from Handel's "Julius Caesar," was ill-chosen, since it calls for great breadth of tone, as well as exceptional dramatic suggestion; and as Mr. Barrie has not, as yet, mastered the art of dramatic attack, his climatic emotions, at times, approach the fatal "stroke of the glottis," consequently, are ineffective.

The real climax of this particular number are the four closing low tones, which, being below the range of Mr. Barrie's voice, were scarcely audible beyond the first ten rows of seats.

Radio Work

Mr. Barrie is a good radio artist, but this very radio work, itself, has undoubtedly militated against his concert prowess, since the application of the same technique is inadequate in concert halls, whose far reaches must be penetrated by the natural voice.

Mr. Barrie's numbers, besides the Handel aria, included selections from Purcell, Schubert, Brahms, and Coleridge-Taylor's "Ummindful of the Roses."

In This Corner

THE TIMID SOUL

They had decided to go to a movie that evening so off they went down the avenue. Arriving at one theatre, they found it was "Bank Night" and the place was jammed to the outer doors of the lobby.

"Let's not go in here, we'll never get a seat," they agreed.

So they kept on and rounded the corner to the neighboring house, a member of a national theatre chain, upon the marquee of which was billed two first run features.

Just before reaching the box office, however, they noticed a line of about a dozen men, picketing the theatre with signs asking the public to stay out of the theatre until musicians were given employment.

He hesitated, then they both stopped. A glance at the box office showed it absolutely bare of customers.

"Well, shall we go in?" she asked, looking at him queerly.

"Ah, eh," he looked up at the marquee again at the line of picketers and then stepped forward where he could see some of the photos of scenes from the pictures on display outside the theatre.

"Oh," a cowboy picture. "I don't like cowboy pictures. Let's go back,"—he said hurriedly.

So they turned and went back down the street—to stand up and wait for a seat in the first movie. "Now I know I'm a musician either—the sissy.

COLD REMEDY

It is reported that nine out of ten persons you meet nowadays have colds. One of the boys in the office offered us this little remedy which I am turning over to all who are interested, free of charge.

"The name of the fellow who originated it, I am not publishing—because if I did and anybody who reads this catches up to him, the blood will be on my head.

Take some cheese rind and some old bacon rind and pulverize it together until you have a paste. Then smear this paste over your chest.

After applying this paste, go down in the cellar and lie down on the floor. Pretty soon the rats in the neighborhood will smell the concoction and when they appear, they will chase you all the way back upstairs.

The exercise you get from running back upstairs should make you sweat the cold out in short order.

WHEN EAST MEETS WEST

They tell me it really happened. And, from some of the things I've seen, it could have.

In one of the popular night spots in Harlem, there is a character known as "Rajah." The Rajah appears regularly each evening, clad in Mohammedan robes and turban. For a small stipend he will peer into the future of any of the patrons of the place who will sit, spitting with the house on the proceeds.

As a little extra graft, the Rajah presently shows us hungry and jives a meal out of the cook in the kitchen. Workers around the place get a deal of amusement out of the fact that the Rajah adheres strictly to his profession of Mohammedanism.

On one occasion, the cook offered him some pork chops and the Rajah spurned the dish in high dudgeon. He was mollified, however, when the chef substituted chicken for the pork.

One night not so long ago, the Rajah, after finishing his repast, went to work. It was a fairly good night and in short order the Rajah had made about $4.

His next victim offered him a five-dollar bill, expecting $4 in change. The Rajah, seeking to maintain that nonchalance he felt was in keeping with his "profession," handed the man his change and pocketed the bill without looking at it.

A little later, when he had retired to divvy up the proceeds, the Rajah was chagrined to find that the fiver was a phoney.

The place had not yet closed and the particular person who has slipped him the phoney bill was still among those present so the Rajah immediately returned to the table and, in suave, cultured accents informed the man of the "mistake."

The customer, however, just couldn't be made to see it and, so the fortune teller's repeated pleas, merely waved a dismissing hand.

Returning to the back of the place, the Rajah found himself out of his robes and turban and once more appeared at the patron's table.

"Now looks here, Buddy," snarled the former Rajah impassive Oriental, "I don't want no stuff, but if you think you can shove a phoney on this baby, you're nuts. C'mon now, get it up. I ain't no unchipped-beaner and nobody's gonna roll me like that and get away with it."

East met West. In fact, it went West. And the rest is history.

Harlemites Place Two Millions in Dunbar Bank

NEW YORK — With new policies sympathetically engaged to the people it serves, the Dunbar Bank in Harlem has grown within the past year, to be the institution with assets of $3,725,000 and deposits of $2,800,000.

The Dunbar Bank, located at 135th Street and Seventh Avenue, in employing Harlemites from the assistant vice president and branch manager down the line in all departments has been a factor in winning the support of the community.

CARD of THANKS

CARD OF THANKS
Samuel Ashby, husband of the late JENNIE ASHBY of 1926 Mt. Clluvoth Street, acknowledges with deep appreciation the many acts of kindness, the beautiful floral designs and each expression of sympathy extended during his recent bereavement.

IN MEMORIAM

SEWARD—A tribute of love to the memory of my mother, FANNIE, who quietly passed away January 16, 1934.

In my heart your memory lingers,
Sweetly tender, fond and true.
There is not a day, dear mother,
That I do not think of you.
By her daughter,
LELIA B. TAYLOR.
