17-Year Locusts Due To Sprout In State Next June

Insects Harm Fruit Trees, Says Expert. Advises Cheesecloth Tents.

An appearance of the 17-year locust may be expected this year in this section with possibly some resultant damage to fruit trees, says Dr. E. N. Cory, Maryland State entomologist.

Dr. Cory predicted a wholesale emergence of this strange pest "along in June." He saw in it a challenge to biologists to find out more about the peculiar insect. It is not known why so many emerge simultaneously.

A graphic description of the emergence and what is known of the habits of the 17-year locust, or periodical cicada, was given by the entomologist in the current issue of the Maryland Naturalist, published by the Academy of Sciences at Baltimore.

"They will emerge from the ground," he wrote, "crawl upon trees and other objects, split their nymphal skins and emerge as winged adults."

"These will then mate and deposit eggs in groups, or nests, on the undersides of the twigs and forest trees. The eggs are deposited in nests of six or seven eggs each, the nest consisting of two chambers with a thin partition of wood between the rows of eggs. Frayed wood fibers extend out beyond the surface of the twig, forming somewhat of a protection to the inclosed eggs.

"These eggs hatch in from six to seven weeks, and the larvae go into the ground and feed on the sap of trees for 17 years, when there is a reoccurrence of the large scale emergence.

"The feeding of the adult seems to be innocuous, but the egg slits may be disastrous to newly planted orchards, or may reduce the crop on being orchards materially in the year following the cicade invasion. Young trees can be protected by a covering of cheesecloth."

Icing for cake may be prevented from cracking by adding one teaspoon of cream to each unbeaten egg. Stir all together, then add sugar until the icing is as stiff as desired.
