Notables and Ring Great Honor Humphries

Rrr-i-p! Accidents Will Happen

WHY Joe Louis Should Not Be Champ

(Special to the AFRO)

NEW YORK—The reason and facts, why Joe Louis should not become champion of the ring, are shown in the latest issue of The Commentator, a new magazine out recently. In a pithy article by John B. Kennedy, who doesn't pull his punches, three reasons for this are established.

First, for his race, which after the childish exuberance of its masses—bound to abate through repression following upon—will come upon the sad rebuttal of a white victory over Louis.

Second, for the stupid but stupendous importance that will be placed upon the discovery of a white slugger to remove him.

For His Own Sake

Third, he should not be champion for his own sake, as he has an opportunity to teach his own race and ours that he is satisfied to be a national attraction instead of a national nuisance.

This new magazine offers the theory that the danger in a colored person's being officially acclaimed the world's best fighting man, is more potent than we might chance to think. There are millions indifferent to it; but many more millions in our American confluence of clashing racial emotions; who resent it. And since the law prevents other perils in the name of public policy, ordinary social peace is threatened by this.

Louis streaked to the top. He bowled over good, indifferent, and bad and was rushed to fame and fortune in the hands of eager and somewhat greedy men, albeit they knew all the crooked angles of the squared circle and saved Louis from most.

JOE LOUIS

Pair Looked Effete

When a clowning Baer lost his title to a plodding Braddock, Louis made the pair look effete by sandbagging heavyweight after heavyweight—some of his victims were brave like Charley Retalaff; others were buffoons like Kingfish Levinsky.

But Louis had the shock punch that dropped men in their tracks and that has always been a turnstile turner in pugilism.

The racial compatriots idolized him. They alone made his every appearance a financial winner without other support. So he came to galvanize their pride, to the popularity accepted as the hero of their race. It was silly, the Commentator states, but it remains to be true.

Comeback After Defeat

Jack Sharkey was practically wheeled into the ring and out again on the night of his fight with Louis, so in the eyes of the public the Brown Bomber socked his way back when he calmly made Al Ettore listen to the birdits in Philadelphia.

Louis strode from the ring with the roar of the crowd resuming acclaim of the Brown Bomber; the Dark Angel, the New Killer.

That was the climax of Joe Louis's comeback story, but not the real story of that night in Philadelphia, with crowds and shouting and blood and resin under a ribbon moon. The Commentator tells the real story. A little tarty because it reveals the dangerous implications of the prize-fight racket when the color-line undertines racial passion.

Openly Insulting

Leaving the ring that night, either through necessity or error, the Philadelphia police routed stadium traffic through the heart of the colored sector.

The black blocks were jammed with hilarious and openly insulting colored folks, taunting the cars and busses of the white people with cries of "Who won the fight?" jeering in mocking merriment, with here and there sinister-eyed dark boys looking for trouble.

One accidental hitting of a colored person by one of those thousands of cars might have precipitated a race riot.

In New York, scenes similar to this followed Joe Louis's smashing conquest of Max Baer. And we may expect this trouble whenever and wherever Louis battles a white opponent into senselessness, until the night — if it ever comes — he wins the championship of the world, and then the peace and tranquil progress of his own race will be doubtful.

Benezet Club Boxers Win Over Y Team

In the first of a series of inter-city matches the Benezet Boys' Club of Philadelphia took three out of four bouts from the Twelfth Street Branch Y. The boxing team at the Y gymnasium on Saturday night.

The Philadelphia lads were late arriving. They climbed out of an automobile and marching from Philadelphia, dressed hurriedly and went into the ring against Washington amateurs a lesson in boxing.

Except in the first bout, the Philadelphians shaded the local boys. Willie McBride, a featherweight, got the better of John Thomas, his opponent, but Pete Sawyer, the referee, gave the decision to the Philadelphian.

Split Decision

McBride, the cleverest of the Y boxers, outboxed his opponent in every one of the three rounds. The fight was close. John W. Carter, one of the judges, voted for McBride. Lorenzo Jordan, the other judge, voted the fight a draw. Referee Sawyer voted for Thomas. The referee declared the fight a draw.

After the rule banning draw decisions in amateur bouts was brought to his attention. Referee Sawyer changed the verdict and declared Thomas the winner. The spectators booed the decision.

One bout in which Washington Alexander, a Y light-heavyweight got the decision, was won by a disqualification. Alexander was boxing Samuel Turner of the Philadelphia team. Referee Sawyer warned him several times about committing fouls. In the third round, when the referee attempted to warn him again, Turner resented the warning, began to argue and shoved the referee. Sawyer stopped the bout, giving it to Alexander.

While the Philadelphia boys were dressing, Billy Banks, a Y.M.C.A. bantam weight, knocked out Joe Lewis (CCC camp) in the first round, and Wayman Stewart (Southwest House) knocked out Robert Coles (CCC Camp No. 1360), also in the first round.

The summaries:

118-pound class—Billy Banks (YMCA) knocked out Joe Lewis (CCC camp) in the first round.

138-pound class—John Thomas (Benezet Boys' Club) got the decision over Willie McBride (YMCA).

138-pound class — Wayman Stewart (Southwest House) knocked out Robert Coles (CCC Camp No. 1360) in the first round.

135-pound class—Leo Lagard (Benezet Boys' Club) defeated Jimmy Briscoe (YMCA).

145-pound class — William Crudup (Benezet Boys' Club) defeated John Gaitlin (YMCA).

165-pound class — Washington Alexander (YMCA) won from Samuel Turner (Benezet Boys' Club) by a disqualification.

Lions Rout Howard Bisons in Final 10 Seconds of Play

A basket flipped in by Martin (Baby Face) Pree, former Dunbar High School star of Washington, in the final 10 seconds of play, Monday, gave Lincoln University a 39-37 victory over Howard University in the Howard gymnasium.

Pree's shot, which followed a sensational dribbles from midcourt, broke a 37-all deadlock, and gave the Bisons their second defeat in major contests this season. It marked the first time in many moons that Howard has dropped two games in a season.

Free Tops Scorers

Not only was Free the star of the contest, but the diminutive forward was high scorer with 15 points. Charlie Ballard, Philadelphia lad tallied 13 points.

Captain Herbie Jones, Bison forward, led the losers in the scoring column with 12 points with Virgil Gaines, center from Kansas City, Edgar Lee and Bill Jones following him in close order.

Nothing New Under the Sun

EDITOR'S NOTE: Always there are white men who argue why the colored people shouldn't have this or that or the other.

Often upon a time it was agreed that colored people were property, had no souls, simply animals and could not be educated.

They said we were too dumb to read, to count and to think.

That we couldn't vote intelligently.

That we would never make a good doctor or a chemist.

That if we ever earned $15 a week, we would all drink ourselves to death, or else work one week and sleep the next.

That we couldn't stand cold weather.

That children born of colored and white (mixed) parents because of their color blood would be weak and die out fast.

Having refuted all of these arguments, today, Canadian born, Catholic, John B. Kennedy comes forth with an argument, not why Joe can't be champion, but why he shouldn't be.

Kennedy is a NBC radio announcer, associate editor of Collier's weekly. In school he specialized in philosophy, hence this argument.

Kennedy was the radio announcer for the Schmeling-Louis fight. He has traveled far and wide, and has had every opportunity to become broadminded.

(But he is, as is true of so many white men who might so easily take "the long view," still unable to shove the hedge that surrounds his concept of what colored people should and should not do.

COMMISSIONER JOSEPH H. RAINEY SEEKS TO REMATCH LEWIS, ETTORE

PHILADELPHIA—Boxing Commissioner Joseph H. Rainey, who caused the recent Al Ettore decision over John Henry Lewis to be changed to a draw, last week, invited the managers of both fighters to his office to discuss a rematching of the men.

Herman Taylor, white, after a talk with his the commissioner, agreed to provide a return fight in the near future, one of twelve or fifteen rounds.

Commissioner Rainey, renamed to his present position for two years more by Governor Earle last week, announced that the amount of criticism and adverse comment following the Lewis-Ettore bout requires a second engagement to settle the matter of supremacy.

A Line or Two

By OLLIE STEWART

All the world loves a winner. And so do I. But in the world of sports the people who pay the freight will shell out quicker when there is a chance (be it ever so minute) of seeing a consistent winner bounced on his ear, and his carcass, so to speak, scattered to the four winds, along with his reputation. Yes, all the world loves a winner. But sometimes a loser eats more regularly.

I am thinking now of three cases in point. This week there was received a story from San Francisco, relating the glowing but pathetic case of a boxer named Sunny Jim McVey. It seems that McVey is the unfortunate possessor of a pair of arms and hands that deal destruction right and left, before and behind when he enters a prize fight ring. There seems to be no doubt in the minds of Californians that McVey is good. They all admit it. And that's where the rub comes in.

Sunny Jim is so good nobody wants any part of him in the ring.

Which is all well and good for the young fellow with the dynamite fists—except that he needs money for food and clothes and shelter and old age. And the best way he knows to get money is to fight. But he can't fight often, because he does such a good job of it when he does fight. And so McVey remains idle a lot. Personally, I wouldn't advocate losing a bout or two—but I wouldn't be surprised if the thought hadn't entered Sunny Jim's mind.

For four years the Morgan Bears ruled the C.I.A.A. football backyard. When they didn't win they led. It's been that way through 41 games and they still have not been beaten for five seasons. But during this past season the Bears lost the C.I.A.A. championship—and almost lost a couple of games. Already there is a distinct change in the attitude of local cash customers.

When Morgan was evidently superior to all its opposition, school officials had nightmares and sang the blues constantly because Baltimore people attended in small numbers. The attitude was: "Oh, well, what's the use of paying a buck to see Morgan run away with a bunch of chumps?" But now things are different. Any day now Mr. and Mrs. Football Fan expect to see Morgan players being made to look like a bunch of chumps—and when it happens they all want to see it. It's nice to keep winning. But what a difference it makes in the gate receipts.

* * * *

And then there's Joe Louis. The twenty grand he made for hitting Eddie Simms with a left hook, the nice little pile he collected for icing Jack Sharkey and Al Ettore and Jorge Brescia would hardly have been possible if he had defeated Max Schmeling. Of course he would have been in line for the title bout with Jim Braddock—but title bouts are so uncertain. They're very fragile things. Schmeling is in line for the title bout, but he hasn't had one or two fights a month, nor has he picked up frequent additions to his bank account.

Sure, the world loves a winner. But the people who will plank down better than fifteen dollars on January 29 to see the Brown Bomber mix it with Bob Pastor, have an idea that Joe may somehow come a cropper. And a lot of the duds who have climbed hopefully into the ring to make Louis richer would not have allowed themselves to be dragged into the same ring with Joe if he had smacked Schmeling down and out the way he polished off Max Baer.

From Chicago, Arthur Rose writes the following:

"In such sports as golf, swimming, tennis and wrestling the colored athletes do not seem to be able to get a good foothold. This may be due either to lack of ability or to prejudice against them. However, we know in baseball, football, or basketball our teams are always pitted against white groups.

"Another sport capable of being put to such use is soccer. We have demonstrated again and again our speed and stamina. Spectators like our soccer. Sport promoters would do well to promote soccer as a winter sport and as a means of recreation."

The Morgan College Bears resume their home basketball season here tonight (Friday) when they clash with the Virginia State Pirates at the Pride of Baltimore Elks' Hall, 1112 Madison Avenue.

The preliminary game is scheduled to get under way at 8 p.m. Music will be furnished by Johnny Christian and the Blue Jays.

Morgan has had one setback this season, a one-sided drubbing at the hands of the Hampton Pirates. Virginia State was also humbled recently. The A. and T. Aggies turned the trick last week.

However, Morgan officials say the Bears needed a licking to make them wake up and realize there is stiff competition in the conference this year. Against Miner they turned in a much-improved brand of basketball.
