Song Ban Hits Singing Sam

Radio Star Among Those Who Lose Theme

Radio's current major problem of what to do about music since a large number of compositions have been withdrawn from the ether waves has caused plenty of headaches. There is, of course, Ray Noble, who can't use a song of his own as a theme. Then Dick Powell, star for the movie firm which withdrew its music, who can't sing songs from his own pictures.

Probably the hardest-hit is Singin Sam, because his theme song (based on "Tammany") is probably worth more to Sam and his shaving cream sponsor than any other theme tune. That tune alone could serve as the entire commercial announcement for the program and do a good job of it.

Sam now has two weekly programs, one on CBS coast-to-coast and the other on WLW, Cincinnati. Unconfirmed rumors as this was written are that WLW is making its own deal with the owner of the banned numbers, so that Sam for a time may have one theme on one program and a different one on the other. He's just marking time though, now.
