NEW VARIETY TAKING PLACE OF DISEASE-AFFECTED CANE

Five years ago the sugar plantations of Porto Rico were threatened with disaster because of the sudden appearance and the rapid spread of a serious disease known as yellow stripe, or mosaic disease, and the planters appealed to the United States Department of Agriculture for help. Investigators sent to the island by the Bureau of Plant Industry to cooperate with the insular and Federal experiment stations there soon discovered that a variety of cane known as Kavangire, then being grown only in experimental plats, seemed to be immune to this disease, which was attacking practically every other variety grown in Porto Rico.

Kavangire cane is grown commercially in the Argentine, and through the effective cooperation of the director of the Tucuman Agricultural Experiment Station the department made arrangements for an immediate shipment of 5 tons of seed cane of that variety to Porto Rico. The can was packed in charcoal in barrels and shipped about the middle of July, 1919, arriving on the island early in September. This is probably the longest haul of seed cane in large quanity ever made.

The immune cane was grown by the Federal and insular experiment stations for the purpose of increasing the quanity of seed cane. Later this was distributed to each of the centrals on the island, and a recent report shows that it has been giving very good results. One of the stations had 500 acres of Kavangire this year and is planning to increase to 1,000 acres next year. Another has 200 acres in one valley and considerable plantings in other districts. About half of the cane acreage in this locality is now out of cane because of the mosaic disease and only the new variety will be planted hereafter.

One grower of the immune variety reports yields of from 40 to 50 tons an acre, with a sucrose content of 16 to 17 per cent. Another planter says he sold 2 acres of this variety for seed, receiving $500 for the standing cane.

FOOD INSPECTION COST LOW CONSIDERING SIZE OF TASK

Federal supervision of manufactured food products is carried on at a very low cost considering the great quantity of food inspected. According to the United States Department of Agriculture, this cost has been less than one-hundredth of 1 per cent. of the value of those products. That the job of looking after the conditions of manufacture is a big one is indicated by census figures, which show that in 1919 there were 67,453 establishments engaged in the manufacture of food products, with an annual output valued at$13,391,914,000. These figures include manufactured foods only and do not take into account the great volume of commerce in raw foods such as milk, fresh fish, wheat, corn, oats, fruits, and vegetables. To these large amounts must also be added the food products imported, which in 1921 amounted to $672,975,000.
