fects him so much, that he has absolutely refused to give up the reins to him, alledging that when he left the island, he quitted it without leave, and that he considered colonel Fullerton had abdicated the government, and no longer considered him any thing, until his majesty's pleasure was known. About four days ago, colonel Fullerton arrived from Barbados, and the moment it was known, the guards were doubled, and all the regiments under orders, and general Picton sent off a messenger, to signify to him, that if he made an attempt to come on shore, he must stand by the consequences, as loss of blood would most certainly ensue; thus matters are remaining, and colonel Fullerton is under the necessity of staying on board till the commander in chief, Grinfield, arrives from Barbados, who is expected every moment to take the government from Picton by force. These unfortunate disputes have been of the most serious consequences to the inhabitants, for there is no law or justice in the place. It appears that every one who owes money takes advantage of the most unprecedented times. It is evident to all that a change will very soon take place and that English laws will be granted us, where every honest man will be enabled to receive his right; at the time of the brig's arrival these circumstances were so prejudicial that not a single collection either in money or sugar could possibly be made; if you wanted sugars it was a difficult thing to obtain them, even with cash in hand. However impossible these matters of fact may appear to you, I do assure you candidly, these have operated very strongly against us both in sales and collecting, and further, every degree of confidence seems to be lost since these calamities have occurred."

BY THIS DAY's MAILS.

PHILADELPHIA, July 11.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in London to his correspondent in this city, dated May 17, 1803.

"After a most tedious negociation we find ourselves again involved, by the mad and unaccountable ambition of the modern Alexander, in a fresh war. Bonaparte seems determined that there shall be no peace for Europe while he lives, or at least while he sways the sceptre of France.—We have one consolation in going into this war, that we have done every thing that we could to maintain peace, and that, at last, appearing impossible, the heart and hand of every Englishman will be united in repelling the unjust and unwarrantable aggression of this ambitious man."

Maryland.—Suppose it should so happen that the important intelligence from Europe, relative to the renewal of war, and the event of Mr. Monroe's mission, should render it expedient in the opinion of the president to convene congress immediately or at any time between this and October next, what sort of figure would this state exhibit without a single representative! and what sort of feelings would the members of the last general assembly have, who had reduced her to such a sorrowful plight? Formerly the elections for members to congress were held, as now, in the month of October preceding the 3d of March when their term of service expired:—But as it was observed that by this arrangement a representative continued in office several months after his constituents might have declared by their votes that they would not elect him again, which not only made his own situation disagreeable, but tended likewise to weaken his sense of responsibility to them, propriety and convenience both suggested the alteration by which the time of elections was fixed in April. Our democratic legislature, however, without any public objection to this alteration that we ever heard made, and with the experience before them of the inconveniences of electing our members for congress in October, thought proper at their last session to change back again to that month, as if for the mere pleasure of undoing what had been done before them: For really we discover no possible advantage in the change, nor do we even distinctly see what party purpose is to be answered by it. One effect tho' is palpable, as already stated; that by the change Maryland is left without representatives to congress between the third of March last and the period of the next election, so that if any emergency should require an extra session of congress we must let the other states legislate for us. Perhaps indeed sister Virginia would be quite willing to take the like trouble off the hands of all the rest of the family!

A boy who says he is so called, came to my house about two weeks since, and gives the following account of himself, viz.

That his father and mother came from Ireland last spring, and landed in Baltimore, and shortly afterwards removed to a place about 15 miles from that city, called Randles-Town, where they both took sick and died. That he being alarmed, followed a waggon that was coming this way, and having travelled nearly two days, was overcome with fatigue, which occasioned him to stop at my house, where he still remains. He is about 9 years of age, and has a hair lip. His friends, if he has any, are desired to come to his relief.

Proposals

By M. & J. CONRAD & CO. No. 138, Market-street, Baltimore,

FOR PUBLISHING BY SUBSCRIPTION, THE

Works of William Smith, D. D.

Late provost of the college and academy of Philadelphia,

Consisting of sermons on public occasions, in America; practical sermons, and academic writings, as well official as intended to promote the establishment of seminaries of learning, and to assist in the dissemination of science, religion and civilization to the remotest parts of this new world, are now in the press, and will be delivered to subscribers on the following

TERMS:

I. The work will be neatly printed, in four volumes large 8vo, on cream-colored wove paper of a good quality.

II. Each volume will contain above five hundred pages, printed on a large new type.

III. In the first volume will be given an elegant engraving of the author's head, by Edwin, from the celebrated painting of Stuart.

IV. The price to subscribers will be two dollars and fifty cents per volume, in boards, payable on delivery Proposals were first issued by the author, in the year 1789, for publishing a body of sermons on practical godliness, and addressed to "the right reverend and reverend the clergy, and the worthy and honorable lay members of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the states of New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and South-Carolina, then assembled in general convention;" with a statement of his plan, and "trusting, that, if his design should meet with that approbation and countenance, which he affectionately solicited from the members of the general convention, the work might be of use to all well-disposed Christians; and more immediately to those of the following descriptions, viz.

1. To heads of families, who may think it their duty to devote the evenings of the Lord's day to the instruction of their own households.

2. To such pious persons, remote from places of public worship, or unprovided with pastors, who may wish to collect their neighbors and friends, to devote some part of a Sabbath to public worship, and the reading sermons and books of devotion.

3. To young clergymen and preachers of the gospel, who, being ill supplied with books, or a variety of sermons on proper subjects, may be assisted in their earlier compositions by the present work."

Upon which the convention were pleased to pass the following resolution:

IN CONVENTION, August 7, 1789.

On motion of Mr John Cox,

Resolved unanimously, That the members of this convention being fully persuaded that the interests of religion and practical godliness may be greatly promoted by the publication of a body of sermons, upon the plan above proposed; and being well satisfied of the author's soundness in the faith, and eminent abilities for such a work; they do, therefore, testify their approbation of the same, and their desire to encourage it, by annexing their names as

George Washington
John Adams
William Grayson
Ph. Schuyler
William Patterson
Robert Morris
William Sam. Johnson
Ralph Izard
George Read.

Above a thousand names were forwarded to the author from different parts of the United States, forming, altogether, a list which, for respectability, has seldom been equalled.

Since the period above mentioned, Dr. Smith never had sufficient leisure to commit the proposed work to press; he has, however, been enabled to make many valuable improvements and additions to them, among which may be ranked his much esteemed Sermons, preached in Christ church, Philadelphia, in the winter of 1793—4, on our deliverance from the ravages of the Yellow Fever. These and many other considerations have induced the author to extend his plan; and his publishers will soon have it in their power to offer to the public a complete edition of his works.

Any other recommendation of the sermons and other literary works of Dr. William Smith, is hardly necessary to procure a passport, to the patronage of Americans. It may seem almost idle and superfluous to extol what has already successfully passed the ordeal of criticism. A considerable part of the discourses of this divine, have long since appeared in English editions, and have gained the fairest meed of honor—the unanimous praise of the impartial public. The remainder of his discourses and other works, which will constitute the greatest part of these four volumes, were never before printed or collected into any volume; and are now printing from the manuscripts, and will be judged of by the same impartial public, when they appear; for, of the merit of every literary performance this is the true test, decisive and sure.

As to the general reader, whether his curiosity be searching for religious and moral truth, or excursive, in quest of the beauties of composition, there is a peculiar incitement to the purchase of this work. It is not of a rugged and austere character. It presents something more than the severity of a theological system. Instead of the dry bones of meagre disquisition, or the gloomy visage of a fanatic, amid the wearisome monotony of his cloister, the reader will discern many a vigorous and graceful figure, invested in the bright colors of genius, and decorated with the blooming flowers of fancy.
