NIGHT OPERATOR FINDS JOB FULL OF ADVENTURES

"Big News" Usually "Breaks" When Rest Of World Is Soundly Sleeping.

Do more thangs happen in the night time than in the daytime? Have you ever stopped to consider how many fires, floods and big disasters occur during the night as compared with the daylight hours?

The night telephone operators know that for constant interest, romance, adventure and mystery, the long lines during the night, were they able to broadcast their ever-continuous message-carrying story, would require a Robert Louis Stevenson, a Philips Oppenheim, a Joseph Conrad and a Victor Hugo, combined with a composite of Charles Dickens and Charles Reade on the side, to correctly record the goings-on.

When the Black Tom explosion occurred during the war, it literally turned the night time into day time, not only in New York City itself, but in the east generally, for the explosion was heard even as far distant as in New England and Maryland. It occurred about 1:30 o'clock in the morning and immediately calls began to come in over the long lines. Soon traffic conditions along the telephone lines were equal to any day-time conditions then known.

Frequently the newspapers relate how Miss So-and-So stuck to her post until everyone else was safe, and usually it is a night operator who is the heroine. Police records alone show how important a part she plays in the world of fires, floods, explosions, burglaries, murders and kindred calamities.

BELL SYSTEM BUILDINGS TO DISPLAY HOUSE FLAGS

Flying from the staff of every Bell-owned telephone building throughout the country is now a blue and white flag, which has been adopted as the house flag of the Bell System.

The design comprises a blue background, two white discs, the smaller of which is superimposed on the other, a blue representation of a Bell with the inscription "Bell System" in white letters. This design has been used for many years throughout the Bell System as a seal or trade mark. The bell is supposed to symbolize the sending forth of greetings, warnings and other messages, and, of course, it also memorializes the name of the inventor of the telephone.

WHY OPERATORS ROLL THE R IN SAYING THR-R-EE

Why do telephone operators habitually say "thr-r-ee?"

It has been found that sounds such as th, f, v, s and z are the most difficult to understand because they depend upon very high frequencies. Some frequencies of th, f and v exceed 5,000 a second which is about the maximum frequency of human voice waves.

In her training for telephone work she has been instructed that the th sound is difficult to hear over the wire and must be accented if it is to be understood. In her effort to speak the difficult sound intelligently, she usually puts so much stress upon it that it becomes something like "thuh." This causes her to make two syllables of the word "three."

TELEPHONE DIRECTORY ALMOST HALL OF FAME

Adam, Caesar And Many Other Immortals On List Of New York Subscribers.

Adam never had a telephone, but his name is listed in the New York City telephone directory just the same. So are the names of Moses, Homer, Alexander, Caesar, Cicero and many others famous in various fields of human endeavor.

Nomenclature is a fascinating study, and New York's telephone book, with its list of 765,000 names, is a fertile field for investigation. Here will be found not only the surnames of Byron, Shelley and Keats, but also those of Pope, Burns, Scott, Carlyle, Macauley, Tennyson, Poe and Stevenson. Other distinguished characters whose names appear among the New York telephone subscribers are Columbus, Cromwell and Napoleon—indeed, the list might be extended almost indefinitely.

While New York has more telephone subscribers than any other city in the world, it has by no means a monopoly on famous names; and an interesting hour can be spent in seeing how many well-known characters in history or fiction have namesakes in the telephone directory of one's own home town.

PASSES MILLION MARK

Seaford, Del., June 23—Evidently taking poison tablets today in mistake for aspirin, Clement Warrington, aged 60, widely known business man of Greenwood, died before a physician could reach him. He had just returned from his cottage at Lewes Beach and walked to a garage in which he was interested when he complained of a severe headache.

Warrington told the employes of the garage he was going home and take some aspirin, and shortly after taking what he thought was aspirin he became desperately ill. Greenwood is without a physician, and a doctor from Farmington, four miles away, was summoned, but Warrington was dead when he arrived.

No one was at home when he took the fatal dose, his family being at their cottage at Lewes Beach.

Warrington was engaged in the brokerage, lumber and canning business.
