I AM CALLING YOU

I am the best friend you ever had. I am hung about with swpet memories—memories of brides, memories of mothers, memories of boys and girls, memories of the aged as they grope their way down the shadows.

I am decked with loving tears—crowned by happy hands and hearts. In the minds of the greatest men on earth I find a constant dwelling place.

I safeguard man through all his paths. I lift up the fallen, I strengthen the weak. I help the distressed. I show mercy, bestow kindness and offer a friendly hand. I am good fellowship, friendliness and love.

Some time, some day, some hour, in the near or far future, you will yearn for the touch of my friendly hand. I am your comforter and your best friend.

I am calling you NOW!
I AM THE CHURCH. Selected

MORALS RELIGION AND COMMON SENSE

Of optimism and pessimism the difference is quite droll; the former sees the doughnut while the latter sees the hole. Two men looked out through prison bars, the one saw mud, the other stars. Look up, the skies are bright.

A man wrapped in himself has a very shabby coat to protect him from the storms of life. One's own opinion may be good, but let it be not our only garb.

The Law of Love is quite harmonious with the Love of Law. Some people seem to measure their patriotism by the taxes they are able to dodge. No rush to battle ever atones for the sins in the tent.

"Ye are the light of the world," but the switch must be turned on. Life never seems tangled to the fellow who goes straight. To square your conduct, use the Golden Rule. You can conquer a bad habit more easily today than tomorrow. Do it now. Buried seeds will grow, but buritd talent never. Don't bury your talent.

Good advice is good, but a good scare will often help a man more than good advice.

We may have passed through the middle ages, but we are still living in the Meddle and Muddle ages.

Just between you and yourself, what helps you most. Try going to church next Sunday. Even though you should be too deaf to hear the preacher, the Church is still a good place for listening to God.

SALLIE MISSES A BRIDGE—TO SEE CURTISS

As soon as the social columns announced that Ellie had arrived, our house became the rendezvous for all the crowd.

I didn't mind, except for the fact that I wanted to see Curtiss alone. I had only caught a glimpse of him the following day after our conversation at dawn and then he hurried away. giving the excuse that he was working day and night on sketches for the plant.

I couldn't understand why he had changed. Although, he was plainy disappointed at the way I had behaved, he had been so gentle and kind when he realized I was cold. And even though I knew then that he was disapproving of my frivolity, I still believed that I had his love.

The party at Marjorie's had been on Saturday night. All day Sunday, I had remained in bed. Ellie came in the afternoon. I could stand the suspense no longer. I had to see Curtiss Wright, and see him soon.

Ellie was popular in Jacksonville, and there were endless bridge parties, dances and teas planned in her honor by my friends and by those she had already made. Personally I am dead tired of bridge parties and teas. For five years, I have gone to so many of them that I feel as if I have served my time. There's the same insincere gossip about the ones who aren't there, the same frozen salads, individual angel cakes and mousse. The same hypocritical remarks about the prizes over which the hostess had wracked her brain for weeks.

I had never thought much about things like that before I met Curtiss Wright, and besides I had always gone because—well, I suppose because everyone did. There was nothing else to do at the time.

I decided I wouldn't go to the bridge luncheon Amy Bennett was giving for Ellie that afternoon at the Country Club. Ellie knew everybody and one of the girls could stop by on her way out.

I would stay at home and read.

* * *

The happy crowd of girls had scarcely driven off in Agnes Hoyt's car before I grew restless and paced the floor.

I had to see Curtiss Wright.

It never occurs to me that people shouldn't have the things they want and do exactly as they please. So I raced to the phone.

I called the club. He was not there. I called father's office. They said he was at the plant.

I ran upstairs, got into the new Spring coat with its collars and cuffs of gray squirrel and from a bowl of roses I selected one of deep, lustrous red which I fastened near my mouth. A small hat that fits snugly was adjust at its most becoming angle and I was off.

"The silken bully," someone had called me because I smiled at all the cops—That's the way I stayed out of jail. If I had been arrested all the times I had broken the law, father's bank account would have been ruined.

I love the brisk breeze in my face. I thrilled as the accelerator responded. The roadster purred deliciously and the distance stretched behind.

Finally, I reached the plant.

Yes, he was there. Standing about giving directions to the men. I adored the fine ring in his voice and I noticed the workmen moved happily about their tasks as if he were their captain and they his men.

He was a born leader. But not so much by force as a sort of understanding that existed between him and those to whom he gave commands.

He did not see me at once, but a big Irishman ran to the car as I coasted to a stop nearby.

"Anything I can do for you Ma'am?" He was courteous though rough in manner and clothes.

"I would like to speak to Mr. Wright. You know him. Do you not?" I asked nervously.

"That I do, Ma'am. He's the finest gintleman in the woirld. And he has got a 'eart that's big as all out doors. It was jist last night that he sat 'til almost mornin' with Miss Cassie's little lad. He that was boined so bad. We love him to a man. I'll never be forgettin' the toim that he—but then —I'll fetch him for you ma'am."

And he was gone.

"I've come to get you." I said gaily as Curtiss approached the car.

HOW TO FINANCE YOUR OWN HOME

How to finance the building of a home, and pitfalls for the inexperienced investor to guard against are topics of some succinct advice in a revised edition of the handbook for the home owners, prepared by Dr. John M. Gries, head of the division of building and housing of the U. S. Department of Commerce, and James S. Taylor, his assistant, and published by Better Homes in America, in Washington, D. C.

Better Homes in America is entering upon its fourth year of effort, under the guidance of its President, Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, to stimulate interest in home building and home life and to encourage the practice of thrift and economy in home planning. This organization has no commercial purpose and is supported entirely by public gifts.

"Maintaining a high percentage of individual home owners is one of the searching tests that now challenge the people of the United States," declares Mr. Hoover in the foreword to the handbook. "The present large proportion of families that own their own homes is both the foundation of a sound economic and social system and a guarantee that our society will continue to develop rationally as the changing conditions demand."

Budgeting the income is suggested by the authors of the booklet as a practical means of saving funds to carry out the plan for the man whose income is limited, and tables have been prepared showing how a person with only $1200 per annum can plan and build a home.

The new illustrated edition of "How to Own Your Home," is distributed at cost by Better Homes in America from its office at 1653 Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, D. C.
