MARYLAND ASKED TO AID COLLEGE

State Urged To Help Western Maryland College Raise Needed $375,000.

FRIENDS ARE BUSY

On Success Of Campaign Depends Rockefeller Gift Of $125,000 And State Appropriation.

Beginning with the second week in May, the people of Maryland will start the work of raising $375,000 as additional endowment for Western Maryland College in order that the college may benefit by the offer of the Rockefeller Foundation to give $125,000 as an endowment and also obtain a state appropriation of $125,000 for a new building provided the college raises $250,000 for endowment. By raising $375,000 the college will obtain both gift and appropriation.

An official announcement by the officers of the college says:

"The Maryland Legislature has made an appropriation of $125,000 for a Building at Western Maryland College, conditioned on the college raising $250,000 additional endowment. This appropriation is payable July 1, 1927.

"The General Education Board of New York City (the Rockefeller Foundation) announces a conditional gift of $125,000 to Western Maryland College provided the College raises additional endowment to the amount of $375,000, which with their gift means a total additional endowment of $500,000. This condition, if met, will bring the total endowment of the college up to $800,000, and place Western Maryland College in the front rank of American colleges. In other words raising $375,000 secures the state's appropriation of $125,000 and the Rockefeller gift of $125,000, a total of $250,000.

"The Board of Trustees of the College at a meeting held in Baltimore, Maryland, December 9, 1924, gave hearty endorsement to the campaign to raise $375,000 for endowment, to meet the conditions imposed by the State of Maryland and the General Education Board.

"It is desirable that this campaign shall be put on before Commencement of 1925, probably during the month of May.

"Herein is the promise of a new day for Western Maryland College. The 'hopes and fears of all the years' of the remarkable history of this college are met in this challenge to our loyalty and to our faith. An opportunity is now presented where we must think and give in larger terms than ever before. The alumni and friends of other colleges have met their responsibilities in genrous fashion, and it is confidently believed that our alumni and friends will do the same.

"But this cannot be put across unless everybody does his part. The call to the colors will be sounded in the ears of every former student of Western Maryland College. The response will measure their love for the old college and their belief in the ideals for which the college has stood since the day of its founding. And everybody must have a part in the rejoicing that will follow the successful ending of this venture of faith!"

The actual work of raising the fund desired will be undertaken by students, present and former, in this and every other county of the state. One hundred former students have been named as "captains of ten," meaning that each captain will have under him, as a team, nine other students. The captains may also add to their teams such other persons as are interested in the movement to put Western Maryland College "in the front rank of American colleges."

The campaign manger will be Col. Robert J. Gill, of Baltimore, attorney and noted for his splendid services during the war. He will direct the campaign. Meetings of the captains and teams are scheduled for next month in various parts of the state.

LITTLE GATEWAYS TO HEALTH

A visitor at a recent child health conference was startled to hear an attractive young mother say to her curly-headed four year old, "Now, open the pearly gates." The little girl who was an experienced player of the health game immediately responded by opening her mouth and showing two rows of well cared for, pearly white teeth.

Speaking of the care that should be given to the "baby" teeth to keep the pearly gates in good order, Dr. Knox, Chief of the State Bureau of Child Hygiene, said, "two things are necessary—the right sort of food, and intelligent care. It is a mistake to think that the first teeth can be safely neglected on the principle that they are only the first teeth and will be gone in a few years at any rate. The first teeth are as important to the child as the permanent teeth are to the adult. We have been very slow in realizing the relation between sound teeth and good health inthe adult, so it is not to be wondered at that mothers do not realize the relation between a childs health and the condition of the child's teeth.

"The experience of the State Bureau of Child Hygiene at the health conferences for babies and preschool children throughout the state, parallels that in similar conferences in other states—two out of every three children we examine have badly cared for or completely neglected teeth. This is true of even children who are exceedingly well cared for in other ways.

"Sound teeth are almost literally gateways to health. The care necessary to produce them goes back a long way, and a long time before a baby's teething troubles begin. The foundations of a baby's teeth are derived from the food of the mother-to-be. That is one of the reasons why she should plan her diet so that it will be sure to include the foods that will furnish the elements necessary for good tooth and bone building—calcium, or lime, as we usually speak of it, and mineral salts. She gets these from milk and green vegetables. The same elements are needed throughout the entire growing period of a child's life.

"As to care: Children can be saved from suffering if they are taught to keep their teeth and their mouths clean, and free from decaying matter. Before the teeth are cut, the mouth of a young baby cleans itself; injury may be done by even a supposedly gentle swabbing. After the teeth begin to come a baby's mouth can be kept in good condition by gentle cleaning with a swab of cotton wrapped around the mother's finger. After the child is two or three years old it can be taught to use a soft brush. At the first sign of decay a child should be taken to a dentist."

MYTHICAL MOON-JUMPING COW HAS RIVAL IN THE AIRPLAINE

Mythical accounts of milk transportation through the air via the cow that "jumped over the moon" have been approached in reality, says the United States Department of Agriculture. While milk has not exactly been carried over the moon, it has been carried from California to New Jersey by airplane.

The first time this method of transporting milk was utilized was in connection with the national certified-milk scoring contest held recently in Atlantic City. During this contest milk was received in Atlantic City by air mail from a certified dairy located near San Francsco, Calif. The milk was drown from a cow in California on a Friday evening and received in Atlantic City on the following Sunday morning. The container was well insulated and no material change in temperature or quality was noted. This near "milky way" was carried out as a demonstration of expedited service for an essential foodstuff.

The scoring contest was conducted by the American Association of Medical Milk Commissions and was held in connection with their annual meeting. I was supervised by a representative of the Bureau of Dairying, who reports that the contest was unusually close. Milk from 31 certified farms located in 11 states was entered for scoring, and there was but 1.5 points difference between the highest score and the score of tenth place.
