FARM WORK.

The mid-winter season is not one during which out-of-door operations can be carried on to any extent—the chief business of the farmers and planters of the Middle States being restricted to the care of stock, the repair of agricultural machinery and implements, the laying out of plans for the future culture of the fields which are to be brought under the plow in the spring, and lastly, a careful study during the spare hours and on long winter evenings, of the information which agricultural journals impart on topics connected with rural affairs generally.

SURFACE DRAINS.

A weekly examination of the surface drains that have been formed to protect the growing wheat from a superabundance of moisture should be made and all obstructions to the free passage of the water should be promptly removed.

FIRE WOOD.

We have repeatedly called attention during previous months to the propriety of securing in due season an ample supply of fire wood for the uses of the household. We presume that this has been done; but provisions should also be made for a stock of fuel to last throughout the ensuing year. This kind of work can be performed to advantage in dry, bracing weather, during the mid-winter months better and with less interference to the regular field operations than at any other season.

FENCING.

Bad fences make breachy cattle. Good fences are among the most significant indications of a good farmer. They add moreover greatly to the appearance of the fields which they enclose, and are moreover desirable in every respect. Fencing stuff may be felled and cut into lengths suitable for rails and posts, and when split to their approximate size may be hauled to the barn or to sheds adjacent to it, where the posts may be hewed and mortised and the rails pointed ready for use at any future time.

MATERIALS FOR MANURE.

We have already urged so frequently the importance of gathering together every species of rough, fiberous material for the purpose of covering it by the addition of the manure drawn from the stables and cow sheds into a most valuable compost that it is scarcely necessary to do more at this time than to reiterate our suggestions under this head.

GATES.

Bars are a nuisance. They waste time at seasons of the year when time is the most precious. As temporary substitutes for gates their occasional use may be tolerated, but as any handy man who has an ordinary knowledge of the use of tools can construct a gate, some of the spare hours of winter could not be better employed than in getting them ready to replace such as may at present constitute the entrance way into the fields and cattle roads.

FOWLS.

To keep fowls warmly sheltered during the winter is to promote their early laying in the spring. If they lay early they will set early, and as spring chickens are a delicacy for the table and bring a high price in the market, pleasure and profit may both be consulted by providing fowls with such protection as they require. Keep the floor of the fowl house clean. Furnish them with sand and slack lime and ashes with occasional messes of fresh meat, cut fine, and with a little grain and a constant supply of fresh water, they will amply repay the care taken of them. Give them a warm mess daily of a mixture of vegetables, well cooked, and meal or bran with a little seasoning of salt.

PLOWING.

There often occurs during this month a fine open spell of weather that can profitably be embraced by plowing all stiff, clayey spots or fields, and subsoiling the same, leaving it in the rough for the action of the frost and snow.

IMPLEMENTS.

There is no one machine more indispensable to the farmer than a corn and cob mill, if time, economy and usefulness enter into the management of farm stock. This mill pays for itself every month where there are thirty or forty head of stock of all sorts to be fed daily with grain. No better food can be given to all kinds of stock than corn and cob meal, coarsly ground, and for cattle, mules and horses, if it be mixed with finely cut hay or even straw well dampened and softened with warm water. That the cob is of much value when thus ground is no longer a matter of doubt, because both practical experience and science have demonstrated that important fact, and every intelligent stock breeder now feels that a Young America Corn and Cob Mill is essential to both economy and profit in stock feeding.

NOTHING LIKE FIGURES. — "My dear sir," said the grocer to a customer, who had given him a twenty-five cent piece with a hole in it, in payment of an article he had just selected, "I can't take that money."

"What's the reason you can't take that money?" inquired the customer, getting his bundles in a convenient pile for transportation.

"Why, don't you see it's got a hole in it," remonstrated the grocer.

"You don't call that a hole do you?" exclaimed the bold customer, pointing to the mutilated coin.

"Why, certainly I do," said the perplexed grocer.

"Well, it's only one quarter, isn't it?" queried the customer.

"Certainly, it's only one quarter."

"And don't it take four quarters to make a whole," said the customer triumphantly, as he picked up the best umbrella he could find in the stand, and left the bewildered grocer to figure the thing out on a piece of brown paper with a blue pencil.

Le marriage civil: Absent-minded French Mayor, who has been a magistrate, to the bride (impressively):—

"Mlle. Rosette, do you consent to take M. Capounet for a husband?"

Mlle. Rosette, having consented, the Mayor then turns to the bridegroom and says solemnly:—

"Prisoner, what have you to say in your defense."

Tableau.

Silence reigned supreme: "I know," said a little Canton girl to her older sister's young man at the supper table, "that you will join our society for the protection of little birds, because Ma says you are very fond of larks." Then there was a silence, and the Limburger cheese might have been heard scrambling around in its tin box on the cupboard shelf.

Had a hallucination: They were sitting beside the grate when all at once she looked up and said:

"Richard, do you believe that people ever labor under hallucination?"

"Of course they do," he replied.

"I was just reading of a husband who went to bed supposing he had $20. in his pocket, but on awakening in the morning there was but $18. He at once charged his wife with robbing him and a separation resulted. Wasn't it awful?"

"Yes, rather."

"If you should suspect me of getting up in the night and going to your wallet that would be awful, too, wouldn't it?"

"Not any too awful, for I haven't had a cent in it since I can remember," he said as he turned to his paper.

That was all she wanted to know. She got up that night and went through the hind pocket of his pants, and the next morning he had a hallucination that he was $4 short.
